Mrs. Belmont To Preside At Auditions

Mrs. August Belmont, distinguished patron of grand opera, will preside as mistress of ceremonies in the Metropolitan Opera Auditions of the Air over the NBC Blue Network and WRTD at 5:30 P. M., in the absence of Edward Johnson, general manager of the Metropolitan Opera.

Mrs. Belmont is founder and chairman of the Metropolitan Opera Guild and the first woman to be elected a director of the Metropolitan Opera Association.

Two of the three contestants to be heard on this program have had trials in previous seasons. They are Anna Mary Dickey, soprano, of Decatur, Ill., and Beatrice Brody, contralto, of Lansing, Mich. It will be the third trial for Miss Dickey, who is now singing in the Broadway musical production based on the life of Gilbert and Sullivan, "Knights of Song." She will be heard in the "Ballatella" from Leoncavallo's "I Pagliacci," and "Midsummer," by Henry Worth.

Miss Brody studied at Michigan State College, in Salzburg, Austria, and, since her opera audition last spring, has finished her post-graduate study at the Juilliard School in New York City. She will sing "A Mon Fils," from Meyerbeer's "Le Prophete," and Rachmaninoff's "Floods of Spring."

The third contestant is Edward Boucher, basso, of Boston. He studied at the New England Conservatory and at Peabody Institute in Baltimore. Boucher will sing "Le Tambour Major," from Thomas' "Le Cid," and "November," by Lilia Ormand. The ensemble will sing an excerpt from Offenbach's "Tales of Hoffman," and the Metropolitan Opera Orchestra, with Wilfred Pelletier conducting, will play the Overture to Wolf-Ferrari's "Secret of Suzanne," and Ravel's "Pavane."

HOW IMPORTANT are the lyrics of a song? Could a popular song of today live without lyrics as some of the classics have done? Sammy Kaye, the swing and sway maestro, is sure they couldn't. Lyrics have become so important that he (and several other orchestra pilots) employs three vocalists and a harmony trio.

Sammy Kaye

"When you consider the leading song hits of the day, you realize they become successful as much for their lyrics as for their melody," says Maestro Kaye. "Prime examples are 'So Help Me,' 'Music, Maestro Please,' 'At Long Last Love,' 'While a Cigarette Was Burning' and 'Change Partners.'

"I find listeners like to softly sing the lyrics as they listen to modern melodies. They pay close attention to the singers, listening for every word.

"I consider lyrics so important, that, if I were a song writer, I would write the words before the melody."

Sophie Tucker, self-styled "last of the red hot mamas," will return to the networks next Monday for a series of CBS airshows. Favorite chanteuse of the Duke of Windsor and trademarked in the musical work by the song "Some of These Days," we're wondering how the blond songstress, who unhesitatingly admits her 50 years, will stack up with youngsters like Bea Wain, Dolly Dawn and Edythe Wright who prefer to be called swingstresses.

Sophie Tucker

It finally has happened! Shakespeare has gone swing! Very shortly the networks will air a tune called "Blow, Blow, Thou Winter Wind." It's from the Bard's play, "As You Like It." But the immortal playwright would never recognize it if he could hear Bob Crosby and Ella Fitzgerald with Chick Webb when they start swinging it.

Too bad this jam session couldn't have been aired: Artie Shaw, Tommy Dorsey, Jack Teagarden, Freddie Leonard and Roy Bargy meet in the studios this week to stage a jam session for the visiting French swing expert, Hugues Panassie, author of that swing bible, "Le Jazz Hot." And especially since Tom Dorsey and Teagarden are rivals for the title as the world's greatest trombonist.

THE MOST recent boy to come out of the South to fame and fortune on the networks is Skinnay Ennis, band leader now holding forth on the Wednesday night airshow with Bob Hope.

Skinnay Ennis

Ennis' contribution to radio rest in his novel vocal delivery and band style. His whispering, half-spoken manner of vocal delivery was an earmark of the Hal Kemp style during the 12 years Skinnay spent in the Kemp band. In organizing his band, however, he went further than his own voice in his search for novelty and distinction. He experimented with various instrumentations and finally hit upon a departure from the prosaic in having four trombones play in close harmony on the same figures that saxophone are usually handled.

That he has hit upon something is evident in the popularity of his broadcasts and his recordings.

Among the radio stars visiting the wax works last week, the finished product of the French star, Jean Sablon, is probably the most surprising and pleasing! The French songster, supported by Claude Thornhill's orchestra, cut (Victor) Hoagy Carmichael's all-time masterpiece, "Star Dust," and in his continental manner, has given new life to this old favorite. The platter is reversed by "J'Ai Ta Main," a pleasing melody of French origin . . . Ted Lewis waxed (Decca) his old-time favorite, "When My Baby Smiles at Me," in the typical Ted Lewis manner . . . Connie Boswell did well in recording (Decca) "There's Something About an Old Love" and "Summer Souvenirs"—both designed for her style of vocal delivery . . . Mildred Bailey and her orchestra grooved (Vocalion) the tune they're all talking about, "Old Folks," and it's for likable listening . . . Gene Krupa's swingmen cut (Brunswick), "Tell Me With Your Kisses" and "Love Doesn't Grow on Trees," but neither tune was suited for the Krupa rhythm . . . Ella Fitzgerald with Chick Webb's band waxed (Decca) "I Let a Tear Fall in the River," a daffy title but a swell tune which is reversed by the band and girl going to town on "MacPherson Is Rehearsin'" (To Swing).

Vass Family Signs Year's Contract

The Vass Family, four singing sisters and their brother, will be heard exclusively on the National Barn Dance and the Sunday Afternoon in Rosedale programs for the next year, at least. Members of the talented musical act and the NBC Artists Service have signed a contract for the exclusive services of the singers on those commercial programs.

Since 1932, when they first faced a microphone, the Vass Family has been known as one of the busiest groups in radio. Their new contract offers them an easier schedule than they have had heretofore.

The family moved to New York from Greenville, S. C., in 1931 without a thought of ever entering radio. An aunt had a part in a program, a cousin was playing in "Brother Rat" on Broadway, and another cousin was in the cast of "Tobacco Road."

In New York, their aunt asked them to appear on the NBC Children's Hour program, singing songs the way they used to at home. Their success was instantaneous.
