There are many considerations when determining where to live. Students should take time to consider all of their options, become informed about the housing search process, and understand the terms of leasing. In addition, living off-campus will require you to pay for living costs such as utilities, cable, and internet. When you are factoring in the associated costs of your housing options, be sure to include these.

When you live off campus you are a resident of both the University community and the local community, so you bear the extra burden of meeting the University’s expectations for students and the community’s requirements for its residents. Be a good neighbor. Be conscious of noise levels and parking regulations. Keep the property clean and tidy.
