athletics department also on the list, including athletic director Morgan Burke and women's head coach Sharon Versyp.

Students may find it surprising to see that only one faculty member from the College of Engineering made it to the top ten paid list.

But what is most surprising is the fact that the only engineering faculty member on the top ten list was Leah Jamieson, dean of the College of Engineering. She earned $348,948.24 last year.

The annual salary guide listing all of Purdue's paid positions came out with surprising numbers and names. The highest paid faculty member is by no surprise Matt Painter, head coach of the men's basketball team.

As the College of Engineering is one of Purdue's accolades, it's unexpected to see members of the School of Management make it on the top ten list.

His salary was $2,114,125.62 in 2012. The recently fired head football coach, Danny Hope, was paid $1,601,538.26, which includes a large buyout. There are four people from intercollegiate

Three faculty members from the School of Management are on the list: Chris Earley, the dean of the School of Management who earned $480,192.02 last year; John McConnell, an Emanuel T. Weiler distinguished professor of management who received $436,916.48 and Richard Cosier, Leeds professor of management who earned $378,560.30.

Earley said his primary duties are to manage the faculty, staff and students as well as work with alumni and outside parties. In the future, he would like to see the School of Management be connected with science, technology, engineering and mathematics core.

“(I would like to see) an emphasis on connecting Krannert to the core competencies of the University as well as helping to facilitate the educational missions of other units such as pharmacy, veterinary medicine, liberal arts and et cetera,” Earley said. “I see Krannert as a facilitator of general education teaching all of our students at Purdue the basics of business and working within an organization.”

Logan Jordan is the associate dean of administration for the School of Management and earns considerably less than Earley. His salary was $164,927.34 as of last year. His duties include information technology and human resource issues.

“My role is associate dean for administration, which is involved in IT, facilities, HR issues, graduate and undergraduate staff, some financial planning and whatever project or initiative that might arise,” Jordan said.
