Hourly waged student makes over $6k in Union last year

BY TAYLOR VINCENT & MORGAN HERROLD

Assistant Features Editor and Features Editor

One Purdue student earned the most money of any Purdue student employee last year, while maintaining an hourly wage of $5.05 an hour.

Taylor Brewer, a senior in the College of Technology, made $6,328.02 last year as a server in the Purdue Memorial Union. While being paid on the lowest hourly rate for student employees, tips were a big part of his total income for the year.

Brewer said that his job is only a fraction of what he does and he usually does not work more than what students typically would in most jobs, despite making such a substantially higher income last year than other students.

"My job really doesn't take up much time out of my schedule," Brewer said. "I plan my classes so that I can work Tuesday and Thursday lunch shifts, so it doesn't interfere with other things I do. I usually work around 10 hours a week and more if I'm scheduled on a weekend shift."

Ryan Jones, the Sagamore Restaurant operations manager, said that Brewer is always up to the task and get things done

when he needs to in order to work under

"While sometimes it may seem that (Taylor) purposely leaves himself a shorter amount of time to complete the everyday task, I think that is just his way of challenging himself, but sometimes to my dismay," Jones said. "Ultimately, it is the working under pressure that is key to being a successful server. Each day presents different challenges and you never when that unexpected rush is going to catch off

Purdue advisers earn inconsistent salaries

BY EMILY THOMAS

Assistant Campus Editor

Although projects to standardize pay for academic advisers have been established, a huge wage gap is still present.

For the College of Engineering, salaries range from $30,812.15 for an academic adviser to $43,494.35 for a senior academic adviser. For the College of Liberal Arts advisers, the range is from $12,564.72 to $50,817.48 for the highest-paid adviser. However, Billi Jennings, director of first-year engineering advising, with a salary of $58,901.94, said that engineering advisers do not do anything different from the liberal arts advisers, although the program is more structured.

"It doesn't change how we advise the students," said Jennings. "We advise them on anything and everything that any other college at Purdue would advise their students on. For example, academic resources, projected plans of study, study abroad (opportunities), cooperative education programs and internships are all covered."

For both colleges, the advisers operate from 8 a.m. to 5 p.m. and advise nearly 250 students about coursework, objectives and requirements for majors and minors.

"(Besides advising students) advisers attend professional advising meetings and meetings from the registrar, may teach a class, conduct change of degree objective meetings and participate in 'Purdue's for Me' and introduce Purdue," said Jennings.

Joshua Dexter-Wiens, an academic adviser for the College of Liberal Arts, said that during registration, he will see up to 11 students for 30-minute meetings throughout the day.

"What most students don't realize is that academic advising is its own profession," said Dexter-Wiens. "There are national associations and other academic advisers who make moves from university to university in a professional way. To make Purdue stand out, many projects have been in place."

According to Dexter-Wiens, in 2012, a project to try to standardize pay for advisers took effect.

Other programs, such as a professional advising office for prelaw and pre-health majors, have also been centralized. Regardless of the pay difference, the goal of advisers at Purdue is to provide advice for students on a multitude of levels.

"We are striving to move past registration issues," said Dexter-Wiens. "We want to offer developmental advising about goal setting and career choices. The goal across campus is to get advisers to a workload where this is possible."

LAW ENFORCEMENT

Campus police compensation outpaces city police

STAFF REPORTS

Compensation of the Purdue Police is significantly higher than of West Lafayette and Lafayette police but remains in line with similar university-specific police

Last year, four members of the Purdue Police each earned more than $85,000, with Purdue Police Chief John Cox earning just shy of $100,000. In comparison, the police chiefs of the West Lafayette Police and Lafayette Police earn closer to $70,000, according to public records of local government employees.

This discrepancy in pay is not unique among large university police forces; in fact, in comparison to several other Big Ten schools, Purdue's force receives a relatively modest compensation. At the University of Illinois and Ohio State, for instance, senior police receive in excess of $115,000, according to records released by the schools.

Part of this could be attributed to crime rates; statistically speaking, West Lafayette has the lowest crime rate among cities with Big Ten universities. However, that doesn't explain the discrepancy between Lafayette police and Purdue police, given that Lafayette has a much higher crime rate than West Lafayette. In Columbus, Ohio, another high crime city, the outgoing police chief earned approximately $150,000, significantly more than the university's police chief.

Another factor is almost certainly the specific challenges posed by working as a university police force. Eric Greenberg, a night-shift lieutenant for the Purdue Police, said that, although all officers attend the same law enforcement academy, there are inherent differences in working in a university environment.

"One of the biggest differences is obviously athletic events," Greenberg said. "We have a lot more security events. ... We sometimes have to bring in more officers (from other police departments)."

Greenberg also noted the difficulties of working primarily with a younger, potentially more reckless and immature demographic, saying that, in many cases, the Purdue Police work as much to protect students from themselves as from anything else.

"Here, parents are sometimes hours away, and you have to be able to help (students) to be adults," Greenberg said. "It takes a different kind of training. ... You have to be more tolerant."

Jones has also known a few students who made a lot of money. He has seen students make upwards of $9,000. However, some of his students are also working over the summer which allots to making significantly more than other employees.

Brewer said being a server is a stressful job. Working difficult customers and not getting tipped make his job harder, but the satisfaction of working with good people and doing a good job makes everything worth it.

Many Purdue students may find it hard to be active in multiple time consuming activities such as athletics, organizations and other activities, but Brewer has found time to be a part in the Purdue community outside of work.

"I also am involved in several other organizations on campus," Brewer said. "I am in the co-ed service fraternity, Alpha Phi Omega, where I hold a position setting up service projects around campus for members to participate in. I am an active member of the Purdue Speech and Debate Team, where I do two forms of debate and half a dozen types of speech."

Time management is one of the many skills that college students come away with upon graduation. Brewer has found that balance is a major part of succeeding and taking days off when you have to do, even if that means not working when you are scheduled to.

"I see my job as giving me the opportunity to do what I enjoy," Brewer said. "I know that I'm here to study and get good grades, so that's my main focus at the end of the day. If I have an exam on a day that I work, I usually request off and take the day to study."

For many college students, their parents and family are a huge support system and take on a lot of the financial responsibility that comes with a university education. Brewer is not immune to this idea and finds that being a server will make his life easier with some cash to fall back on.

"My parents are paying for four years of undergrad, so after this semester I'm pretty much cut off," Brewer said. "I've been saving and trying to get ready for when I have to depend on myself for the first time. It also gives me a little money to go out and have fun while not having to worry as much about how much money is in my bank account."
