AP Source: Chargers agree to 1-year deal with LB Nick Vigil

The Los Angeles Chargers have agreed to a one-year contract with free agent linebacker Nick Vigil. A person familiar with the deal says it was finalized

Tuesday. The person spoke to The Associated Press on condition of anonymity because the team hasn't announced the move since it is pending a physical.

Vigil has spent the past four seasons with the Cincinnati Bengals, who drafted him in the third round in 2016, and where he made 37 career starts. He started every game last year and was second on the team in tackles

Depth at linebacker has been an issue for the Chargers the past two seasons. They were also looking to get younger at the position after releasing 15-year veteran Thomas Davis Sr. before the start of free agency.

Vigil is the third free agent addition Los Angeles has made on defense. It has agreed to deals with cornerback Chris Harris Jr. and defensive tackle Linval Joseph, but those are also pending physicals.

NHL extending isolation period for players and staff

The NHL is extending its recommendation for players and staff to self-isolate and stay away from team facilities during the ongoing coronavirus pandemic.

Multiple people with knowledge of the recommendation told The Associated Press on Tuesday the NHL has asked that players and staff extend their self-quarantine 10 days beyond the original March 27 timeline to April 6 — further pushing back the earliest team facilities can reopen. The people spoke to The AP on condition of anonymity because the the NHL hadn't formally announced The league over the past two days has held conference calls with its Board of Governors and general managers to update them on and take questions regarding the current situation. There is still no clarity on when the NHL might resume its season. Commissioner Gary Bettman said recently the decision to resume play would be made in accordance with health officials. He has also said the league is working on various scenarios about what a potential return to play could look like.

The league remains optimistic about resuming this season and awarding the Stanley Cup, even if it means playing games deep into the summer or early fall.

The NHL plans to stage a full 2020-21 season, even if it means starting as late as November.

Two Ottawa Senators players tested positive for COVID-19, and six others were tested with results pending. The league has said its medical experts do not recommend mass testing for players or staff unless they exhibit symptoms.

Sox has tested positive for the coronavirus, prompting the team to close down its training complex in Fort Myers, Florida. The Red Sox made the announcement Tuesday, a day after the positive diagnosis. The team didn't identify the player, but said he was doing well. Earlier this month, the New York Yankees said two of its minor leaguers had the virus. Those were the first two players affiliated with a big league organization known to test positive. Major League Baseball has postponed opening day until at least mid-May because of the virus outbreak. NASCAR orders pay cuts for employees

Tuesday that pay cuts will be imposed across the company until the series returns to racing. NASCAR President Steve Phelps announced the

The memo said series executives, including the presidents of NASCAR-owned tracks, will see a 25% reduction in salary, while all other employees will have their salary reduced by 20%. # Colonial tournament might not happen

By DOUG FERGUSON Associated Press

Michael Tothe was supposed to be at the World Golf Championships event this week in Austin, Texas, to resume recruiting players for the Charles Schwab Challenge at

Even though the tournament is still two months away, this is the time to beef up advertising and fill out the roster of its 1,500 volunteers. Colonial is the next event on the PGA Tour schedule. Tothe, the tournament director, has no choice but to plan as though it will happen. Even though it might not.

"We're a memo, a phone call, a declaration away," Tothe said Tuesday. "What we talk about today could change tomorrow."

Consider how much has changed in so little time because of the new coronavirus.

Two weeks ago, PGA Tour Commissioner Jay Monahan was discussing the tour's new media rights deal as Rory McIlroy was preparing to defend his title at The Players Championship. Since then, the Masters ed - grandstands, hospitality and PGA Championship were postponed. Monahan canceled the next four events on the schedule, and then the next four after that.

Next up is Colonial, scheduled for May 21-24.

Behind it are the Rocket Mortgage Classic and the Memorial, each proceeding on parallel paths - one in which the tournament will be played, another that it won't. Tournament directors feel for the Valspar Championship, the first tournament fully erased from the schedule. It was canceled with three days' notice after paying to have the sprawling infrastructure erect-

Colonial is in a holding pat-

"It's business as usual, but it's really not," Tothe said. "At this moment, we've stopped spending anything on advertising. We've delayed our build. We're reaching out to all our corporate partners and charities, updating them. We're still recruiting volunteers. We're being fiscally responsible, erring on the side of communication."

Communication is about the only game in town, even if there's nothing to say. "There's just tons of questions," said Tyler Dennis, the tour's chief of operations. He said the Tournament Business Affairs division is in daily contact with tournaments, from those that have been canceled to those still months away and wondering what contingency plans should be developed.

The U.S. Open is going through a similar drill, uncertain if can proceed June 18-21 at Winged Foot in New Rochelle, New York.

USGA spokesman Craig Annis said workers stopped building structures more than a week ago based on guidance from the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention, and New York Gov. Andrew Cuomo signed an order that took effect Sunday night directing all nonessential businesses in the state to close in-office personnel functions.

"Based on where things stand now and the latest restrictions put on the area and throughout the state of New York, we do not know when the build-out can proceed," Annis
