NVRH saved my life.

When Lyndonville artist, Lori Hinrichsen, had a heart attack,

EMS quickly transported her to NVRH. There, the highly-skilled Emergency Department team triaged, stabilized and readied her for helicopter transport. Within 90 minutes of her symptoms, she was in emergency surgery at Dartmouth Health. Now back home, she continues her rehabilitation with NVRH's Cardiac Rehab team and is back to creating art.

"My heart attack came out of the blue. I am so grateful for the life-saving, professional care I received at NVRH. They were so kind and reassuring—they looked into my eyes and said, 'you're going to be OK.'"

Despite providing exceptional care, Vermont hospitals are not OK. Rising costs and pressing regulations are threatening their ability to care for communities. Without support, they could lose essential services. We must continue to fight for our rural hospitals.
