Casino Developer Publicly Announces Littleton Plans

Staples Meadow Street Store To Close By June 26

BY ROBERT BLECHL
Staff Writer

LITTLETON — Citing benefits to the local economy and nonprofits, the developer of a casino announced its plans in a press release on Thursday, following the $10 million purchase in February of the Kilburn Ledge property at 780-804 Meadow Street.

On Thursday afternoon, The Caledonian-Record also learned that the Staples office supply store, at 804 Meadow St., where the casino will be built, is expected to vacate the building by June 26 to make way for construction.

In its announcement, Granite State Gaming and Hospitality (GSGH) said the development marks “the future site of GSGH’s newest charitable gaming and entertainment development” and “is a milestone in GSGH’s vision to grow New Hampshire’s charitable gaming industry responsibly while fostering local economic opportunity.”

The casino, which will feature around 230 electronic gaming machines, a dozen table games, and a dozen electronic table games, is slated to occupy the 23,000-square-foot building.

With construction scheduled to begin in the summer of 2026, the project is most of the way through the design and planning phase, “with a focus on creating a facility that reflects the company’s commitment to innovation and community partnership,” said GSGH representatives.

GSGH, owned by Chicago-based casino developer Greg Carlin, is collaborating with the Chicago-based DMAC Architecture and Interiors for the Littleton project’s overall concept and layout.

“With extensive experience in hospitality and gaming environments, the team is shaping a design that pays homage to the region’s landscape and history, blending contemporary elements with local character to create a dynamic and welcoming guest experience,” said GSGH representatives.

“This acquisition is a vital step in building a sustainable, community-focused gaming model for Northern New Hampshire,” Eric Barbaro, chief operating officer of GSGH, said in a statement. “We remain committed to responsible growth that delivers a meaningful, long-term charitable impact.”

GSGH, an affiliate of G2 Gaming, partners with nonprofit groups “to generate sustainable funding and deliver meaningful, long-term community impact,” said its representatives.

“Through its existing properties, Beach Club Casino in Hampton Beach and Lilac Club Casino in Rochester, GSGH has already demonstrated the strength of its operating model, where a significant portion of gaming revenue directly benefits licensed nonprofit partners,” they said. “To date, operations at both locations have generated more than $4 million in contributions to veterans’ groups, youth organizations, and community service nonprofits across the state.”

The Littleton casino is expected to create more than 60 jobs, expand vendor partnerships, and significantly increase funding for local area nonprofits, they said.

Additional updates will be provided as the project advances through design and regulatory review.

Local approvals do not appear to be needed.

The casino is expected to open in early 2027.

In 2023, about 100 residents turned out to a public information meeting, where Carlin took questions and outlined the plans. The vast majority of residents opposed a casino in town.

At the March 2026 town meeting, voters approved a petition to ban casinos within the town, though that would apply to additional casinos and not to Carlin’s proposal, which had already been in the pipeline with an application before the state.

Upon purchasing the property in February, Carlin gave Staples a four-month notice.

public relations on Thursday asking if Staples will be opening a new location in Littleton or in the Littleton area was not returned by press time. A telephone call to the company’s media relations office was also unsuccessful.

The next closest Staples stores are in North Conway and Tilton in New Hampshire and Barre in Vermont.

The other Kilburn Ledge occupants, located in the building between Staples and the former Tire Warehouse, include the state liquor store, Asian restaurant, military recruiting station, and a beer and smoke shop.

Ex-Sheriff, County Seek Dismissal Of Grafton Co. Sheriff Lawsuit

BY ROBERT BLECHL
Staff Writer

An ex-sheriff, a county, and her own sheriff's department are asking a judge to dismiss the lawsuit filed against them by Grafton County Sheriff Jillian Myers, who alleges retaliation, infliction of distress, and whistle-blower violations by her predecessor, former sheriff Jeff Stiegler, when she served as a deputy.

After filing her civil claim and request for a jury trial on Jan. 2, Myers, of Lisbon, has since amended her complaint, which was followed by objections and moves to dismiss by the defendants as a hearing at Sullivan Superior Court, where the case was transferred, is scheduled for May 27 for the pending motions.

Myers, elected to her first term as sheriff in 2024, initially filed a discrimination and hostile work environment claim against Stiegler with the New Hampshire Commission for Human Rights in 2023.

After review, the commission concluded that there was probable cause for her claim of retaliation by Stiegler, whom she alleged launched a retaliatory investigation against her, but found no basis for her claims of discrimination and harassment.

Myers, who joined the sheriff's department as a deputy in 2021 when she was pregnant, alleges that harassment and sexual, gender-based, and other comments made by Stiegler compelled her to quit two years later.

Represented by Concord attorney Kathleen Davidson, of the Pastori Krans law firm, Myers' amended 23-page superior court action against the three defendants alleges four counts of retaliation, wrongful termination/discharge, violation of New Hampshire's Whistleblower's Protection Act, and against Stiegler only, intentional infliction of emotional distress.

She seeks all damages allowed under law, as well as court costs and attorney's fees.

Stiegler, of North Haverhill, who is represented by Concord attorney Keelan Forey, of Gallagher Callahan and Gartrell, has filed a motion to dismiss the count of intentional infliction of emotional distress, arguing that Myers has failed to state a claim and his actions do not rise to the level of "extreme and outrageous conduct" to warrant such a claim.

In its motion to dismiss, the Grafton County Sheriff's Department argues that the claims against it are duplicative of those against the county, and the department is a division of the county and not its own standalone entity against which a lawsuit can be brought.

"Further, Myers' suit against the Sheriff's Office — even if it could provide relief — is fraught logistically," wrote Marrielle Van Rossum, the Manchester attorney representing the sheriff's department.

"Currently, Myers is Grafton County's High Sheriff," said Van Rossum. "She oversees the county department that she is suing, therefore effectively suing herself in her professional capacity. Myers would be the person authorized to answer on behalf of her office during discovery. This problematic relationship provides further grounds for dismissing Myers' complaint in its entirety against the office she now holds."

After serving three terms as county sheriff, Stiegler did not seek reelection in 2024.

Littleton's Perry Goodell Reflects On First 100 Years

BY ROBERT BLECHL
Staff Writer

LITTLETON — Vermonter by birth, Littleton resident by love, Perry Goodell reflects on a century of living and the impact he's had as a town leader, educator, father, husband, and Second World War veteran.

He celebrates his 100th birthday on Monday.

The centenarian and professional engineer who has served as a commissioner of Littleton Water and Light, director of Littleton's public works, and a teacher in Littleton schools also imparted some advice on how to live a fulfilling life.

Goodell and his wife Eschol, who were high school sweethearts, were raised in Vermont just across the river from Dartmouth College.

Immediately after graduating from Thetford Academy, he entered the Navy during the last years of World War II, first serving in the North Atlantic and then in the Pacific Theater, where he guarded aviation fuel on U.S. naval tankers.

"They put me on a tanker," said Goodell. "I was in the armed guard, which was one of the most dangerous places to be. Back then, I didn't realize it was that dangerous. I was young. We went, we did the work, and that was it."

A Navy seaman first class, Goodell was in the Philippines when the Japanese surrendered in August 1945.

After the war, he completed a degree at the University of Vermont.

In 1952, he and Eschol arrived in Littleton, where the Moore hydroelectric station and dam were being built.

"I was working for New England Power, and I came here in connection with the dam," said Goodell.

A few years later, he would go on to work for the U.S. Army Corps of Engineers and become familiar with the Northeast Kingdom, where, for a time, he was chief engineer for the construction of the short-lived North Concord Air Force Station atop East Mountain.

"At that time, they were building a radar station in Victory and it was obsolete before they ever finished it," said Goodell. "I was up there for probably a year, a year and a half. The engineer that was in charge was from Maine. It came winter and he wanted to go back to Maine, so I was left with it."

By the time the Corps of Engineers wanted to send Goodell to Rhode Island, he was ensconced in the North Country.

Unwilling to leave Littleton, he left the Corps to become superintendent of the Littleton Public Works Department, where he served for 15 years.

Then, heeding the call to pass on his engineering knowledge to younger generations, Goodell spent another 15 years teaching pre-engineering, math, and shop at Littleton High School, where his students included Carol Boisvert Murray, who would go on to become commissioner of the New Hampshire Department of Transportation, and Glenn Lavoie, who would become a co-owner of Winterset Inc., the general contractor and bridge specialist in Lyndonville, and who would design the Littleton footbridge and oversee its 2004 construction.

Several former students would later say Perry's teaching sparked their interest in the engineering field, said Eschol.

He would take his students outdoors, to streets and other sites, for surveying lessons, and would teach drafting in the classroom.

The aim, he said, was to expose students to a type of learning so they could determine for themselves whether they wanted to take it further.

It's rewarding when some later become leaders in their field, he said.

"He does have his former students stop in and talk to him every once in a while," said Scott Goodell, son of Perry and Eschol.

"Glenn brings him maple syrup to this day," said Eschol. "He gives Perry a lot of credit for the background he got in high school."

After graduating from Littleton High School, Glenn Lavoie attended the University of New Hampshire to become a professional engineer.

As of 2026, he has spent 43 years in engineering and construction, working for NHDOT and in private engineering throughout northern Vermont and New Hampshire.

"I took pre-engineering and mechanical drafting with Mr. Goodell around '75 or '76," Lavoie said Friday. "When I graduated in '78, I wanted to be an architect because of what we did in high school."

He recalls the lettering guides for the drafting plans and how, if one could write to a certain standard, they wouldn't need the guides.

"I had to perfect my handwriting and that has carried me right through to today," said Lavoie, who is now in semi-retirement after launching his own Littleton-based engineering and design firm. "I even had a compliment yesterday at a pre-bid about my handwriting."

He recalls Goodell leading the class to spots outside of the school and to Remich Park for instruction in topographic sur-

Franconia Man Indicted On Charges Of Sexual Assault Against Child

A Franconia man faces charges of sexually assaulting a child, and other residents face charges for injury assaults in the April round of felony indictments delivered by a grand jury at Grafton Superior Court.

Connor S. Bogie, 21, of Monroe, was indicted on a Class B felony count of second-degree assault and three Class A misdemeanor counts of simple assault causing bodily injury.

On April 26, 2025, in Monroe, Bogie is alleged to have recklessly caused serious bodily injury and orbital facial fractures to "T.L.," then age 17, when he hit T.L. in the face when T.L. was standing and hit again when T.L. was on the ground, where Bogie then pressed his hand on T.L.'s body.

Darrel Dietlein, 62, of Franconia, was indicted on a special class felony count of aggravated felonious sexual assault against a 5-year-old child and a member of his family, whom he is accused of touching for the purposes of sexual arousal or gratification between February and May 2024.

The charge carries an extended term of imprisonment.

Dietlein also faces two Class B felony counts of indecent exposure and lewdness, accusing him of exposing himself to the child.

Darcie M. Ingerson, 35, of Whitefield, was indicted on a Class B felony count of possessing methamphetamine on Dec. 22 in Littleton and a Class B felony count of possessing fentanyl on May 4, 2025, in Littleton.

Christopher G. Jones, 31, of Lisbon, was indicted on an enhanced Class A felony count of first-degree assault and an enhanced Class B felony count of second-degree assault.

On Jan. 27, Jones is alleged to have caused bodily injury to Jared Orben by means of a deadly weapon when he struck Orben in the head with a firearm.

Lacey Paye, 34, of Groton, Vt., was indicted on a Class B felony count of possessing fentanyl on July 25 in Haverhill.

Leo R. Roberts, 61, of Littleton, is charged with a Class B felony count unlawfully driving a vehicle along Route 302 on Nov. 4 in Haverhill, after the New Hampshire Department of Motor Vehicles declared him a habitual offender in 2010 and revoked his driver's license

Mary Smolinsky, 34, of Haverhill, was indicted on a Class B felony count of possessing fentanyl on July 6 in Lincoln.

veys and maps, using the old-school methods before modern GPS units.

"I used those all through the years, the skills that I learned," said Lavoie. "We immersed ourselves in the process, not just books or lectures, but life experiences."

Through the years, Lavoie and Goodell would bump into one another.

"He'd always ask me, 'what are you working on now,'" said Lavoie. "He was always interested in what I was doing, where I was, what projects I was working on. He's a wonderful guy, and I always enjoy visiting with him and his wife. He's a positive role model, and I always enjoyed him. I still to this day call him Mr. Goodell."

As he neared retirement, Goodell provided engineering consultant services to local towns, including Carroll and Franconia.

He would serve a term on the Littleton School Board and, in retirement, serve more than two decades on the three-member board of Littleton Water and Light, overseeing infrastructure improvements and ensuring that LWL's rates remained among the lowest in New Hampshire and New England.

"I enjoyed serving the people," said Goodell.

After first moving to Littleton's Cottage Street in the 1950s, Perry and Eschol would eventually move into their current home on Manns Hill the day after Christmas 1978.

A hunter, fisherman, and avid outdoorsman, Goodell, who was born on a farm in Pompanoosuc village in Vermont, has enjoyed three-quarters of a century living in Littleton, where he enjoys the rural life.

"We've made some good friends here," he said.

While Littleton's population has hovered around 6,000 for decades, Goodell noted changes.

"The stores have all changed," he said. "The grocery store used to be on Main Street, the hardware store was on Main Street.

Everything was on Main Street.

In 2025, he and Eschol celebrated 75 years of marriage.

They have four children — Charlene, Rita, Craig, and Scott — nine grandchildren, and a dozen great-grandchildren.

"We went to Thetford Academy and that's where we met," said Eschol, who turns 100 in January. "We were classmates. He went off to the war and I went to UVM. He came back and we dated off and on a bit. We dated when we were in high school. We've had a long relationship. He's a nice guy."

Perry gave some advice on what makes a rewarding life.

"You've got to be friendly," he said. "You've got to like people."

Woman Accused Of Ramming Police Cruiser, High Speed Chase Released

BY ROBERT BLECHL
Staff Writer

A Groton woman arrested in January on charges of ramming a stolen pickup truck into a police cruiser and causing injuries to officers during a high-speed chase in Littleton has been released on electronic monitoring.

Marisa N. Levesque, 42, who faces two Class A felony counts of first-degree assault with a deadly weapon and one Class B felony count each of reckless conduct with a deadly weapon and disobeying a police officer while causing a collision resulting in serious bodily injury, is also required to enroll in a residential substance abuse treatment center as part of her bail conditions.

According to a check on Monday, she has been released from the Grafton County House of Corrections, where she was booked on March 31, and moved into supervised custody and monitoring.

According to court records, Levesque was conditionally accepted into New Freedom Academy Behavioral Health, part of Granite Recovery Centers, of Salem, N.H., for a 50- to 60-day clinical plan of care.

Levesque was arrested Jan. 30 after allegedly stealing a pickup truck in Gorham and leading police on a westward pursuit across northern New Hampshire, where, on northbound Interstate 93 along the Moore Reservoir causeway, she caused a chain reaction by striking one cruiser, which then struck a second, which struck a third and injured each of the officers inside who had been able to get ahead of her in an attempt to slow her down through a rolling roadblock.

Levesque, who authorities said reached speeds of 105 mph, was taken into custody along southbound Interstate 91 in Vermont after Vermont State Police disabled the truck with spike strips.

At the time of her arrest, she was out on bail for a February 2025 felony charge of possessing methamphetamine in Haverhill.

According to the Littleton District Court order for the chase and assault charges that was signed by Judge Gerard Boyle, Levesque's bail shall convert to personal recognizance if she is accepted into a high-intensity residential treatment program level of care upon a bed becoming available.

Prior to release, she was required to be enrolled in the Grafton County Pre-Trial Services Program, to be placed on electronic monitoring during the period of residential treatment, and to be monitored for compliance by pre-trial services.

If Levesque leaves residential treatment before successfully completing the program, bail shall immediately revert to preventive detention, and a warrant would be issued for her arrest if she fails to surrender to the Grafton County House of Corrections.

Successful completion would also result in a reversion to preventive detention, after which bail would be considered anew.

As of Monday, no future court date had been scheduled, and Grafton County prosecutors had not yet taken the charges to a grand jury for indictments.

After two months of fighting extradition to New Hampshire, Levesque, who is being represented by public defender Jay Duguay, was transported from her incarceration in Vermont to New Hampshire, where she signed a waiver of extradition on April 15 and waived a probable cause hearing that had been scheduled for the same day at the Littleton court.

While injured, each of the three police officers did not have to be hospitalized.

Following Residents' Concerns, County Officials Evaluating Nursing Home Options

BY ROBERT BLECHL
Staff Writer

Before the cancellation of a special Coos County Commission and Delegation hearing that had been scheduled for Monday regarding a bond to partly fund a county nursing home conversion in Colebrook, area residents detailed their concerns and offered suggestions.

To date, the county's plan has been to close the Coos County Nursing Hospital in West Stewartstown, which was built in the 1930s, and move residents and operations to Colebrook, where the county would buy the former Colebrook Academy building, constructed in 1911, and make the needed renovations to convert it into a new nursing home.

The most recent plan has entailed a 70-bed nursing facility and 10 private-pay single rooms. In March, the New Hampshire Executive Council approved $23 million in federal Rural Health Transformation funding toward the project.

During the past few months, county officials have consulted with the New Hampshire Community Development Finance Authority and the county's bond counsel regarding the bonding of about $5 million.

During the county commission's April 15 meeting, the minutes for which were released this week, residents from Colebrook, Stewartstown, and Clarksville turned out to voice their concerns about the county's possible purchase of the Colebrook Academy and the relocation of the nursing hospital to Colebrook.

In addition to West Stewartstown Nursing Hospital, the county has a second nursing home in Berlin.

Allen Coats, of Stewartstown, suggested combining the two nursing homes in a central location and offered the town of Stark as an example.

The county previously enlisted BerryDunn to complete an analysis of nursing home options, one of which included a new 75-bed facility in West Stewartstown on Back Pond Road, at a cost of about $30 million, with about $18 million of it financed by debt, as well as the consolidation of the Berlin and West Stewartstown homes into one facility in Groveton.

BerryDunn concluded that financially and demographically, Coos County can support two nursing homes.

The cost of a new 125-bed facility in Groveton would be about $60 million, and the debt financing for it was found cost-prohibitive by county officials.

BerryDunn recommended an addition of $5 to $6 million to the Berlin facility, which would allow reconfiguring 100 rooms to include 10 private-pay rooms and help with finances.

Financially, BerryDunn concluded that a new facility in West Stewartstown would be viable and said that the condition of the existing West Stewartstown facility was negatively impacting the census.

County officials concluded that there was no appetite among the commission or the delegation to bond the $18 million needed, or 60 percent of the total cost, for a new West Stewartstown nursing facility.

County officials also said the consensus is that the current nursing hospital cannot be renovated with residents in the building.

During the April 15 meeting, Rick Samson, a resident of Stewartstown, asked if parking has been considered at the Colebrook Academy location, where he said nursing home residents would not have the nice view that West Stewartstown provides and would only have buildings to look at.

Samson also inquired about the project's impact on the tax rate.

In response, Coos County administrator Mark Brady said that a new facility would increase the Medicaid bed rate and, based on a preliminary analysis, the interest costs would be absorbed by the new bed rate.

The bond principal would be $4 to $5 million during a period of 20 to 25 years, he said.

Dwayne Covell, of Stewartstown, asked if the commission supports the move and closure of the West Stewartstown facility. Taxpayers have concerns about the project, he said.

Tom Brady, chairman of the Coos County Commission, said he has been one of the biggest advocates of the nursing hospital over the years and said having only one nursing home in the county is not fair to people who must travel to see their loved ones.

In addition, Brady said he receives questions from his constituents about the costs of maintaining everything in West Stewartstown.

Questions were also raised about the future of the Coos County House of Corrections, which is located in the same West Stewartstown complex as the nursing hospital.

Chris Gray, a resident of Stewartstown, asked if the jail was closing. Brady responded that a decision had not been made.

The former Colebrook Academy, which is owned by Colebrook contractor Dan Hebert and auto dealerships owner Dan Dagesse, is currently assessed at $680,000.

That assessment would be removed from Colebrook's tax base if it became a nursing home, said Colebrook town manager Tim Stevens.

In addition, if the jail moves to Berlin, anyone arrested after 10 p.m. would have to be transported to Berlin by either a sheriff's deputy or town police officer, which would make for an additional 2 1/2 hours to the workday, said Stevens.

Stevens also asked what would happen to the county Department of Corrections staff.

April Busfield, water precinct manager, said the current nursing hospital complex accounts for 40 percent of West Stewartstown's water income, and a closure could spike water fees to $500 per quarter for users.

Lynn Dorman, of Stewartstown, expressed concerns about additional costs and said operations at both Upper Connecticut Valley Hospital and Weeks Medical Center remained in their facilities during construction.

On Thursday, Coos County commissioner Ray Gorman said no future meeting date or approximate date regarding the bond has been scheduled, and the nursing home matter remains a work in progress as the county evaluates options.

As of mid-April, the census at West Stewartstown Nursing Hospital was 56 residents, for an 83.6% occupancy rate based on a total bed count of 67.

The Berlin Nursing Home has a current census of 79 residents and a 79-percent occupancy rate.

$5.1 Million Authorized For Sewer Plant Upgrades

Select Board Makes Reappointments To Boards, Committees

BY ROBERT BLECHL
Staff Writer

LITTLETON — After two voter approvals, and as a Friday deadline looms, some of the big money being sought for upgrades to the sewer plant along Meadow Street has been authorized.

Following a 4-0 Select Board vote on Monday, the town manager, finance director, board chair, or town finance director are authorized to sign all forms associated with the Clean Water State Revolving Loan Fund to receive up to $5.177 million in newly awarded funding.

“The reason this came in late is the date got shifted, and it’s due May 1,” said Kerri Harrington, chair of the Select Board. “It’s a good rate, a better rate.”

During a special town vote in December, voters authorized up to $2.5 million in bonds for wastewater treatment plant repairs and upgrades. That money has not yet been sought.

At the March town meeting, they authorized up to $9 million in bonds.

Both votes reached into the 80-percent range of voter support, and both bonds could be reduced by grants, other funding, and loan forgiveness.

“Basically, this is the $9 million bond that was voted in,” said Eric Oliver, director of the Littleton Department of Public Works. “We’ve secured $5.1 million of that in a loan. Until we are complete with construction, it’s 1 percent. It’s a pretty good deal. Also, when we finish that there will be loan forgiveness. I’m not sure what that rate is, if it’s 10 percent, 15 percent, but there are additional monies that are going to be applied towards the loan number. And this is just the start. We still have other funding that we will be applying for throughout the year. This is just the first one that came due right now.”

A loan term length has not yet been decided upon by the town and can be selected afterward, following the award of funding.

The interest rate is 1 percent until the work is finished, said Harrington and Selectman Taylor Caswell.

“As long as it’s open, it’s 1 percent,” said Oliver.

Once completed, a 5-year term is 2 percent interest, a 10-year term 2.59 percent, and a 15-year term 3.8 percent, said

Harrington.

Several weeks ago, town officials searched the market for the best rates.

“These beat the other loans we got by one or two points or more,” said Harrington. “They’re really good rates.”

Regarding the $5.177 million amount, the town might not need to use the full $9 million, said Oliver.

“When it was put on the warrant it was ‘up to,’ so the idea was hopefully we don’t spend $9 million,” said Harrington. “And some of it comes in with grants or loan forgiveness, which sounds like it’s a very distinct possibility.”

Appointments

Familiar faces will remain on the advisory town-school budget committee, the town cultural arts commission, zoning board of adjustment, planning board, and conservation commission after the Select Board made reappointments of current members seeking new terms.

The budget committee had two open three-year seats.

Reappointed were budget committee members Mary Menzies and John Goodrich.

The Littleton Cultural Arts Commission had one open three-year seat. Reappointed was Jason Tors.

Reappointed to the commission’s open alternate seat was Kathleen Searles.

The Littleton Water and Light Commission had one open three-year seat. Reappointed was commissioner Peter Cooper.

The zoning board had two open three-year seats.

Reappointed were incumbent zoners Ken Lavine and David Fiandaca.

Julia Butner was reappointed as a zoning board alternate member.

The planning board had two open three-year seats. Reappointed were planners Bruce Ralston and Kevin Kihslinger.

Lloyd Thomas was reappointed to an open two-year seat on the planning board.

The planning board must also have two seats filled by Select Board members.

Appointed planning board ex officio member was Selectman Taylor Caswell. Appointed alternate ex officio member, in the event of Caswell’s absence at a planner meeting, was Selectman Paul Lehmann.

Although no one applied for the one open three-year seat on the conservation commission, Tom Alt, the commission’s chairman, said that position will be filled by a current member.

Jeff Merrill was appointed to the conservation commission’s two-year alternate seat.

OBITUARIES

PHILIP RICKER

Philip R. Ricker, 74, of Collins, GA, passed away on May 2, 2026. Born on Sept. 2, 1952, in St. Johnsbury, VT, he was the son of Paul N. Ricker and Patricia Page Ricker.

Philip graduated from Woodsville High School in 1970 and continued his education at Plymouth State. During his school years, he discovered a deep love for the performing arts, enjoying singing, acting, and dancing.

His passion for the stage stayed with him throughout his life, notably through the plays he performed in at the Old Church Theater in Bradford, VT. In 2009, he appeared in a TV commercial for the Vermont Agency of Agriculture, promoting phosphorus-free fertilizer with the memorable message: "Don't 'P' on your lawn."

Professionally, Philip spent the majority of his career in restaurant management. In 2009, he sought a new path and became a phlebotomist, first working at Dartmouth Hitchcock before moving to Naples, FL, to work for the Florida Cancer Centers in Ft. Meyers and Naples. Upon his retirement, he moved to Collins, GA.

Philip cherished the many friends he made along the way. He especially loved the time he spent growing up at Lake Groton during the summers.

He leaves behind his sister, Paula House, nephew Christopher, wife Samantha, children Lilly and Lucy, and his niece Kimberly.

There will be a private burial in Pine Grove Cemetery, Woodsville, NH.

Donations in Philip's memory may be made to The Old Church Theater, c/o Melissa Mann, PO Box 304, Bradford, VT 05033, or Shriners Hospital for Children, 89 Park St., Chicopee, MA 01013.

Ricker Funeral Home & Cremation Care of Woodsville is assisting the family with arrangements.

ROBERTA MCGEE

Roberta E. McGee, 88, passed away at her home Friday morning, February 6, 2026, after a long battle with cancer. She was surrounded by her loving family. A Mass will be celebrated at St. Patrick Catholic Church on Saturday, May 16th at 11am. Burial & Committal will follow after mass at Saint Margaret Cemetery with a reception at the Maplewood Golf Club. Donations may be made in her memory to North Country Health & Hospice, 536 Cottage Street, Littleton, NH 03561 or Voice for Animals, PO Box 34, Harrison, ME 04040.

New Owners To Reopen Lancaster Motel Under New Name "Red Fox Inn"

BY PAUL HAYES
Staff Writer

LANCASTER — New ownership plans to renovate and reopen the Lancaster Motel under a new name.

Gopal Patel said the property will be rebranded as the Red Fox Inn, a reference to Lancaster's official town symbol. It adds to his regional portfolio that also includes the Eastgate Inn in Littleton and the Saffron Inn in Auburn, Maine, bringing his total holdings to nearly 150 rooms across three properties.

Patel began working in the hospitality industry more than a decade ago, starting as a laundry attendant at a motel in Massachusetts while also taking on maintenance and overnight front desk duties. While still working full time, he invested with family members in a motel in Lincoln, N.H., helping operate the property on weekends. That property was later sold.

He later acquired the Eastgate Inn in Littleton, a 40-room property, and in 2023 purchased a 72-room hotel in Auburn, Maine, now operating as the Saffron Inn.

Patel said the Lancaster Motel's Main Street location and proximity to the White Mountains and Great North Woods made it an attractive acquisition. He said the building's layout — including guest rooms, extended-stay units, a lounge, banquet rooms and kitchen space — offers flexibility for redevelopment.

The property is currently undergoing transition work, including repairs to water pipes damaged during the winter. Patel said the goal is to reopen to guests in the near term while completing renovations in phases.

Planned upgrades include bathroom renovations, new furnishings, heating and mechanical system improvements, security upgrades and exterior work such as signage, landscaping and parking lot improvements. The final room count and layout remain under review.

Patel said he plans to reopen the property's bar and lounge under a new concept, pending required licensing, and to reactivate three banquet rooms for events, meetings and community gatherings.

Previous owners Ruby and Brian Berryman have assisted with the transition, providing contact information for former staff. Patel said he is reaching out to determine who may return and expects to hire locally as operations ramp up.

"I started in this industry doing laundry and fixing things at two in the morning. Everything I have, I built with my hands. When I look at this property on Main Street in Lancaster, I don't just see a building — I see what it can become. I see guests sitting outside on a summer evening, I see families coming through on their way to the White Mountains, I see local folks gathering at the bar after a long day. That's what the Red Fox Inn is going to be — a place that belongs to this community as much as it belongs to us," Patel said.

Patel thanked the Berrymans for their stewardship of the property and cooperation during the transition, as well as local officials and Bangor Savings Bank for their support in completing the acquisition.

News that the property will remain a motel comes after AXIS Realty Group of Londonderry withdrew plans to convert The Lancaster Motel into a 36-unit apartment complex.

In contrast, Patel said he represents local ownership and a commitment to the area.

"The North Country has given us a home and a livelihood. Littleton believed in us when we took over Eastgate, and we've tried to repay that trust every single day. We're making that same promise to Lancaster. We're not investors passing through — we're operators who show up, roll up our sleeves, and do the work. This property will be an asset to Main Street, and we're going to prove that with actions, not just words," he said.
