The Cherokee Phoenix made history on February 21, 1828, when its first issue was printed in New Echota, the capital of the Cherokee Nation (now present-day Georgia). As the first Native American newspaper, it was groundbreaking not only for its bilingual publication in English and Cherokee—using the syllabary created by Sequoyah—but also for its role in uniting and informing the Cherokee people during a critical period in their history. Edited by Elias Boudinot, the newspaper was established with the support of Rev. Samuel Worcester, the American Board of Commissioners for Foreign Missions, and Cherokee leaders, including Boudinot, Stand Watie, John Ridge, and Elijah Hicks, who helped raise funds to launch the press.

From its inception, the Cherokee Phoenix was more than just a newspaper—it was a voice for the Cherokee people, reporting on tribal affairs, national policies, and community matters. In 1829, the newspaper's name was expanded to Cherokee Phoenix and Indian Advocate to reflect its broader mission. Throughout the 1830s, Boudinot and Principal Chief John Ross used its pages to strongly oppose the Indian Removal Act and the increasing encroachment of settlers in Georgia. The newspaper also covered key legal battles that shaped Cherokee rights, including the landmark U.S. Supreme Court cases Cherokee Nation v. Georgia and Worcester v. Georgia.

As tensions over removal escalated, Boudinot changed his stance and advocated for relocation to Indian Territory, leading to a divide between him and Chief Ross. In 1832, Boudinot resigned, and Elijah Hicks, Ross's brother-in-law, took over as editor. By 1834, financial difficulties forced the newspaper to cease operations. The final blow came in 1835 when the Georgia Guard, working alongside Stand Watie and the pro-removal Treaty Party, raided the printing office, destroyed the press, and burned the newspaper's headquarters. Four years later, the forced removal of the Cherokee people—now known as the Trail of Tears—marked one of the darkest chapters in Cherokee history.

The Cherokee Nation reestablished its government in Indian Territory and revived its newspaper in 1844 under the name Cherokee Advocate, with Cherokee Nation citizen and Princeton graduate William Potter Ross as editor. The newspaper continued publication until 1906, despite occasional funding challenges and other obstacles. However, Oklahoma statehood led to the suppression of tribal governments, forcing the paper to cease operations once again.

In 1975, following the reconstitution of the Cherokee Nation government, the newspaper was reborn under the Cherokee Advocate name and later restored its historic title, Cherokee Phoenix, in 2007. That same year, it launched a website and transitioned to a broadsheet format, further modernizing its presence.

Today, the Cherokee Phoenix remains a vital and independent news source, delivering trusted coverage of Cherokee Nation government, current events, community affairs as well as Cherokee people, culture and history. The newspaper publishes twice per month print editions and continues to expand its reach through digital platforms and social media. In 2021, it redesigned its website to enhance user experience and launched a mobile app to make its content more accessible than ever. With an engaged and growing audience of more than 50,000 social media followers, the Cherokee Phoenix is a powerful platform for advertisers looking to connect with Cherokee citizens and allies across the country.

For nearly two centuries, the Cherokee Phoenix has been a symbol of resilience, advocacy, and progress. As it continues to evolve, it remains committed to its mission of informing, educating, and empowering the Cherokee Nation and beyond.

General Advertising Policies

All products published by the Cherokee Phoenix have policies governing the content of paid advertising and the Cherokee Phoenix has had them in place since 2002. The current policies represent a good faith effort to protect the integrity of these products, weed out inaccurate or false claims and ensure that readers have a high level of confidence in the truthfulness of statements contained in our digital and printed publications. The most recent update of those policies are as follows:

The Cherokee Phoenix will examine advertisements before publication to determine if they meet the standards of acceptability that the Cherokee Phoenix has developed.

The Cherokee Phoenix reserves the right to decline any advertising that the Cherokee Phoenix deems misleading, inaccurate or fraudulent; that makes unfair competitive claims; or that fails to comply with its standards of fairness, decency and dignity.

The advertiser will be notified if an advertisement contains statements or illustrations that are not deemed acceptable and that the Cherokee Phoenix determines should be changed or eliminated. The Cherokee Phoenix will attempt to negotiate changes with the advertiser; however, if changes cannot be negotiated, the advertisement will be declined by the Cherokee Phoenix.

The Cherokee Phoenix maintains clear separation between editorial content and its advertisements. Accordingly, ads that include elements usually associated with the Cherokee Phoenix editorial content will not be accepted (for example, but not limited to: Cherokee Phoenix - style headlines, bylines, news-style column arrangements or typography). Additionally, the Cherokee Phoenix reserves the right to label an advertisement with the word "advertisement" when, in its opinion, this is necessary to make clear the distinction between editorial content and advertising.

Whenever, in judgement of the Cherokee Phoenix, the credit of the advertiser has been impaired, the Cherokee Phoenix shall have the right to require pre-payment in full by cash or credit card.

Advertisers shall be responsible for timely providing to the Publisher (Cherokee Phoenix) all Client Material necessary for publication and distribution of the Ads, including all necessary artwork and/or digital files, the timing, and formats of which may be more specifically set forth in the signed Cherokee Phoenix Advertising Agreement or in the Cherokee Phoenix media kit Advertising Guide. If all necessary materials are not received in time for the scheduled run date, and unless otherwise specifically instructed by the Advertiser, the Cherokee Phoenix may, at its sole discretion, use artwork or other materials from previous Ads placed by the Advertiser, if applicable. The Cherokee Phoenix will not be responsible for Client Material that is not properly formatted or displayed or that cannot be accessed or viewed because it was not received by the Cherokee Phoenix in the proper form, in a timely manner, or in an acceptable technical quality for publication.

Upon submission to the Publisher (Cherokee Phoenix) of the copy/graphic(s) set forth in the signed Cherokee Phoenix Advertising Agreement, the Advertiser is allowed to change the graphic within the first 72 hours of the initial submission at no cost. If the Advertiser wishes to change the agreed upon graphic after the 72-hour change period a fee of 25% of the total agreement price will be added to the final cost of the agreement for each change allowed. All graphics must still meet all size/color requirements entailed in the original signed Cherokee Phoenix Advertising Agreement. The Cherokee Phoenix reserves the right to refuse any copy/graphic changes if it is deemed that the change will interfere with or impede publishing, printing, production or mailing of the newspaper or the integrity of the Cherokee Phoenix website/digital platforms.

All advertising copy that might be mistaken by a reader as news, feature or other non-advertising materials must be clearly marked "advertisement". In the event such copy is not clearly marked, the "advertisement" notation will be added by the Cherokee Phoenix.

The Cherokee Phoenix will make every effort available to accommodate change of run date requests. All change of run date request allowances are subject to a fee of 25% of the total agreement price for each change of run date allowed. The Cherokee Phoenix reserves the right to refuse any change of publishing date requests if it is deemed that the change will interfere with or impede publishing, printing, production or mailing of the newspaper or the integrity of the Cherokee Phoenix website/digital platforms.

The Cherokee Phoenix is not bound by any terms or conditions, printed or otherwise, appearing on advertisers' forms or copy instructions when in conflict with terms and conditions of the Cherokee Phoenix rate cards, Advertising Agreements or policies.

Agencies shall be held responsible for payment of invoices for advertising placed by them, on their behalf or on the behalf of their clients. In lieu of agency liability, written communication must be provided by the advertiser assuming responsibility of payment.
