As the COVID-19 pandemic has swept across the nation, shuttering businesses, it has forced companies to reinvent how they interact with employees and customers. This has been no different for Central Ridge Insurers, as Tom Ryan, the state House of Representatives member and a veteran himself, told the Chronicle recently.

“Letting people know we are in the office to answer questions face-to-face, instead of on the phone or by email,” he said.

But Ryan doesn’t foresee the pandemic putting an end to his future in Citrus County. He sees a bright future ahead, especially with the Florida Legislature passing a bill that will transform how Citrus County benefits.

“We are doing this to keep the doors open, but limited operations,” he said. “We have the ability to work remotely.

The state reported Sunday that about 4,650 coronavirus cases have been confirmed and at least 1,721 people have since the beginning of March.

River restoration needs to begin

T he Homosassa River Restoration project, which is a movement to save eelgrass in a similar fashion to the Save Crystal River project. It was started by Julie Gibbons, who said the group ran out of funds, and would require a new project after the first phase. The project is close to kicking off and aims for work to start in May or early June. The project is being led by a group of community members who support the cause. They are planning on how to proceed with the project and are working on securing funding. The project is being supported by local community members and is expected to be successful.

The economic impacts of the coronavirus will most likely affect businesses and local government in the near future. The economic impact will be felt in a number of ways, including in the tourism industry. The tourism industry is expected to suffer as a result of the virus and the government's attempt to contain it. The economic impact will also be felt in the local government, as the government is expected to reduce spending and increase taxes. The economic impact will also be felt in the local businesses, as many will face difficulty in maintaining their operations.

The world was waiting to secure more funding for studies and projects, and the state should definitely impact future processes. It should be data driven and not political. Because this virus is not going to run its course, precautionary measures must be put in place. The main cause is to take virus seriously, monitor over-activists, created a rapid response team of professionals with full authority, and secure the funding. Available resources must be mobilized and prepared to address the problems that are being shared, including supply and equipment. Precautionary measures must be taken. We can claim to be a civilized nation, but everywhere else, anything else is not acceptable.

US must make China pay

China is not our friend. We are dealing with a new kind of virus, and I believe that are not prepared for it. Other countries are inching towards the United States, independently, must develop a rapid response team of professionals with full authority, and secure the funding. Available resources must be mobilized and prepared to address the problems that are being shared, including supply and equipment. Precautionary measures must be taken. We can claim to be a civilized nation, but everywhere else, anything else is not acceptable.

Biden not my candidate

Certainly we are not Democrats. Biden will not be our candidate.

Hot Corner: 19-21

This one caller in Monday's (April 20) Sound Off was talking about a column in the Homosassa River. He says the coronavirus is a virus and the other one is the flu and it's not that. Not correct. The flu is "Virus," "Flu," it's not "human," it's "virus," but it's different. There's many different kinds of viruses and many different kinds of animals.

Because of the coronavirus and that, folks, as we're closing our stores and we're wondering if we can get a substitute, we must want to comment on the virus.

I would want to comment on the virus. To say that this virus is not the flu is not acceptable. Problems, problems in the past, but this is different. It's not that one you have to watch is yourself and leave no one else is not acceptable. We claim to be a civilized society. Human life comes before any other life. It comes before any other country. It's hard, but trying to open this country is sound science. We have to put it off and we have to put it off and we have to put it off until we get rid of this virus.

We claim to be a civilized society. Human life comes before any other country. It's hard, but trying to open this country is sound science. We have to put it off and we have to put it off and we have to put it off until we get rid of this virus.

Of course, it is not always clear what the potential risks are at the moment when a physician orders a test for a patient. In some cases, the test may not reveal any abnormalities, while in other cases, it may suggest the presence of a disease or condition that requires further investigation. It is important for patients to be aware of these potential risks and to discuss their concerns with their healthcare provider.

From a patient perspective, it is important to remember that the decision to order a test is ultimately made by the physician based on the patient's symptoms, medical history, and other factors. It is important for patients to discuss their concerns and preferences with their healthcare provider to ensure that they are fully informed and comfortable with the decision to order a test.

From a provider perspective, it is important to consider the potential risks of ordering a test, as well as the benefits that the test may provide. It is important to ensure that the test is ordered for a specific purpose and that the results of the test are used to inform decision-making and improve patient outcomes. It is also important to consider the potential risks to the patient, such as the possibility of false-positives or false-negatives, and to work with patients to develop a plan to manage any potential risks.

Overall, it is important to balance the potential benefits of ordering a test with the potential risks, and to ensure that patients are fully informed and involved in the decision-making process. By doing so, we can help to ensure that patients receive the best possible care and that the healthcare system is able to deliver the highest quality of care to those who need it most.

UFC's return could provide the blueprint for other pro sports leagues

The UFC confirmed the return of its fighters to the Octagon after it was not going to follow the practice of the rest of the major leagues in the United States. Fighters from across the country and the world will participate in an eight-week season starting Friday, with more than 200 fighters coming back to the sport in response to the COVID-19 pandemic. The UFC is one of the few major sports that has continued to hold events during the pandemic, with fighters testing positive for COVID-19.

Researchers received the polymerase chain reaction (PCR) tests used to detect active coronavirus. These tests are considered the gold standard for diagnosing COVID-19. The UFC has implemented these tests and may even be able to alleviate some of the concerns with antibody, the serology tests, that currently are being used to monitor the status of the pandemic.

To address this issue, the UFC has collaborated with the NFL, NBA, NHL, Major League Baseball, and NASCAR to provide assistance and is helping Florida Athletic Commission, the governor and local authorities.

The UFC has two more fight nights and announced its plans to resume competition after five months of confinement because of the pandemic. The league confirmed the positive tests on Sunday but said it will not follow the practice of the rest of the major leagues in the United States. Fighters from across the country and the world will participate in an eight-week season starting Friday, with more than 200 fighters coming back to the sport in response to the COVID-19 pandemic.

We have all heard of the Breastman combination, probably assume that it devised by Sam Stayman, a New York expert who won three Bermuda Bowl world team titles in 1953, 1954 and 1956 national championships.

However, Sam did not devise Stayman. That was done independently by Jack Marx from Lantos and George Eaver from New York. Eaver suggested it to his three-partner Stayman Sam. Thought it was such a good idea that he immediately wrote an article for The Bridge World magazine, and henceforth, the combination was known as the Stayman.

Today’s deal was played by Stayman in Sam’s New York family Causon Club in 1954. Here is Stayman’s account of how and why he felt the spade jack*

*The number of points shown above 15 points in those days. North used to compete against dummy and he later learned he had no ace and four Spades.

There seemed to be 13 top tricks. But Stayman was not willing to rely on good breaks, especially as it was ruled out with a scratch on the line:

Stayman won dummy’s spade ace and cashed the club ace.

When both opponents followed, he cashed the spade jack, re- carding a club from dummy’s, his top hearts, the diamond king and the diamond ace. At this point, Stayman had learned that West had begun with six spades, four hearts, two diamonds and one club.

That meant East had started with four spades. Stayman led the club 10 from dummy and ran it when East played low.

A club to the king, a diamond to the queen, and the club queen pro- pleted the 13 tricks.
