Breathe easier while at home

Vacuum with a HEPA filter

According to the Allergy & Asthma Network, these filters are designed to capture 99.7% of all particles 0.3 microns or smaller, including mold, pet dander, dust mites, pollen and some small particles from smoke and pollution.

Clean your car often

Much like your home, your car accumulates dust. The American Lung Association recommends regularly wiping down the console, dashboard and door panels to reduce these and other air contaminants.

Use air purifiers

One of the easiest ways to improve your indoor air quality is to use air purifiers throughout your house. These portable air cleaners draw in air and filter out allergens and pollutants, improving the health of your home.

Change air filters

Don't go too long in between changing your air filters. These key components are essential in protecting the air around you - not just in your home, but in your car, too.

Use natural products

What you use to clean your home and car may actually be polluting your air, as many conventional cleaning products are made with harsh chemicals.

Subtly fragrant lantana thrives in hot, dry conditions. Its citrus-scented flowers open in tropical shades of pink, orange, red, yellow, and white.

Lavender

Prized for its calming scent, lavender is a perennial herb that is easy to grow in containers. Group several containers of lavender together to make a big impact on a small space.

Storm season is coming: How to prepare for a power outage

Storm-proof your property

Check that your roof, windows, gutters and downspouts are clear of debris. Trim trees and shrubs especially those near your home or power lines. Check outdoor furniture for hazards in high winds and store them when extreme weather is forecasted

Stay informed

Stay updated about local weather conditions. Keep an eye on the forecast so you can plan ahead

Create an emergency kit

Back up your power

The single most effective way to be prepared for a power outage is investing in a solar generator for your home.
