Once the rally was over, the young protesters greeted each other and their parents chatted. “When I was 16, I wasn’t even a hint of what these girls are,” one father was overheard saying. “I’m really proud of them,” another replied. Photographed by Georgia Hampton.

Stephens Life

Walking into the historic Lanthorn House was a breath of warm, musty air on the chilly winter evening. A kind woman greeted us as we walked in and led us to where we could have our meal. The house was relatively empty when we arrived, save for a handful of people gathered around Kate.

When we spoke with her, our voices drifted through the hallways of the old house, visible to the people gathered at the reception. The floor, covered in goose down, made the way to the reception of the theme. The scene of the theme was in the main room. Surrounding Kate were foam boards that held the words of the large sign, painted with fact about the event and the community that people were reading through before the event began.

During the presentation, we shared our stories, talking about our inspiration and interest in the event. Kate told us the story of Toronto and her connection to the Lanthorn. Her story vividly captured the interest of the audience, and the atmosphere was filled with a sense of quiet contemplation. More people showed up than the Lanthorn House expected, so when the original chairs were taken up, the rest of the people stood with their backs to the town, and foam chairs were brought in to compensate for those who could not stand.

For the evening, Toronto-based artist Emma Pond and Toronto Environment Alliance's Graham Marshall, brought up issues that the audience was either interested in or aware of, but also gave starting tides points and realistic calls to action. Many of the crowd gathered about the damage done to the tree. During the light, women lit a fire with a stick and peeped money into it, creating a beautiful and moving atmosphere. Hard on the brink of Lakeshore is the fire. He gave a往往ervice

"It can happen to anyone. It's literally happening right under our noses and people just turn a blind eye."

- Rebauna

We in the US sometimes lose touch with how much we have, how much others are struggling, and how much we take for granted. It's easy to think about human trafficking in terms of others, but it can happen anywhere, anytime, and to anyone. We must stay vigilant and remember that we all have a role to play in stopping human trafficking. It's not just someone else's problem; it's ours, too.

UNSUNG HEROES

INTERVIEWED AND PHOTOGRAPHED BY REBECCA WILLIAMS

The staff and faculty are undoubtedly the backbone of SCAD. It’s easy to take for granted the jobs they do as we trudge along to our 8 a.m. classes with our first-year kits. Countless people work behind the-scenes everyday to ensure our school runs smoothly. They mostly go undetected, yet still, their presence is greatly felt and appreciated. Security guards, shuttle bus drivers, chefs and so many more provide a leg up that we need to get through our days.

I spoke to the men and women who keep the school at full operation to find out more about them and their time at SCAD; I wanted to hear their views on the student body and the overall work environment. What do they think of the students? What can we learn from these dedicated workers and what have they learned from us?

Ms. Cce has been a bartender at the coffee counter in the hub for six years. However, she is more than that to many students. Ms. Cce is known for her warm greetings and her inviting personality.

How would you describe yourself outside of work? I am a people person like I am at work. It’s the same baby, the same.

What have you learned about others since working at SCAD? Different personalities, different cultures, different lifestyles — I love it. As a people person, I just love people. Power to the people!

Doris Cross is a cashier and server in the hub.

How would you describe yourself outside of work? Outside of work I am actually an actress. I’m from Chicago, I came here to pursue my acting career and have more opportunities. I got introduced to SCAD through a temp agency. I worked with them and they kept me. I really like working here at SCAD.

What have you learned about others since working at SCAD? Since I’ve been here, I have really bonded with a lot of the students. You guys have great personalities and are so talented. You can spot the talent in others — that “It” thing. A lot of them have it.

Sarah Cruz is a catalog librarian who enjoys being outdoors.

What’s a regular workday like for you? I work behind the scenes in the library. My job is to make sure the library gets all the books that it needs and that they’re available on the shelves.

How would you describe yourself outside of work? Outside of work, I like to explore and go outdoors. I love seeing what’s in Atlanta — music, talking to people, being out and about. Even though I’m bit intervened at work, I think outside I like to meet new people and try to be as outgoing as I can.

reminiscent of wearing his own category moniker, koestler was chosen to attend in March, when he was offered a full ride to KUCC, said of the Art Institute of Chicago, where he hopes to pursue a master’s degree and pursue his craft.

the two person nation scholarship was offered to throught the new program called new jeferson, which offers certain students between be- and two person nation scholars. according to the AAIC website, normal graduate nation needs around $60,000 per year. for koestler, it would be less.

“to make our first piece,” koestler said of the office. “i’m a determined and accepted into such a competitive program with no formal education on design shows that i’m on the right path, my work is meaningful and has gone well.”

he added that the office “measures not just beyond my ideas but my presence.”

right: koestler works for a portrait in the pub- lic studio at the university of kentucky on march 9, 2019 in lexington, kentucky.
