

Black students in Missouri overrepresented in K-12 school suspensions

Missouri school districts have given around 40 percent of their suspensions to black students every year since 2008. However, black students have never made up more than 20 percent of the student population in that time period.

