

Fewer cancer diagnoses in U.S. since pandemic

Americans have been skipping routine medical care, like cancer screenings, since the pandemic hit the U.S. For example, the number of newly diagnosed breast cancer patients dropped 93% in the weeks after COVID-19 was declared a pandemic.

Sources: Quest Diagnostics,
World Health Organization

TRAN NGUYEN/Missourian