

How do cicadas make their distinct sound?

Cicadas have two thin, ribbed membranes in their abdomens called tymbals, which snap back and forth to create a clicking sound. They repeat this motion more than 300 times per second, which produces the buzzing noise that cicadas are known for.

