

ODOT to fully close Highway 101, south of Bandon, for a weekend in September

By LINDA LEE

Highway 101, about six miles south of Bandon at Bearhead Mountain Lane, will be closed to all traffic from September 19th, at 9 p.m., until late in the evening on September 21st, in order to replace a deep and failing culvert. To help reduce costs and overall traffic impacts, construction will require full closure. “The whole closure should only be through the weekend,” said Julie Denney, Oregon Department of Transportation’s (ODOT) Public Information Officer. “We’ve got a really tight schedule on that project and we’ll be doing a lot of prep work in the weeks ahead.” In most situations, ODOT attempts to keep highways open to all traffic at all times; however, a single-lane bypass would need to be constructed either through a hillside or over wetlands, relocating the stream while adding more cost to the project and disrupting highway traffic for about six months. According to ODOT, the rapid replacement approach is beneficial because shrinking the total construction window from six months to six weeks will reduce overall traffic impacts of the project. Also, eliminating the need for a temporary bypass and shortening the construction timeline could save more than $1 million from the total cost of the project. “Additional storms through the spring just continued to erode

Junior Lifeguard Program has another successful season on Southern Oregon Coast

By LINDA LEE
Curry Coastal Pilot

The popular open water Junior Lifeguard Program launched its fourth season on the Southern Oregon Coast. It offered three sessions for youth ages nine to seventeen vital ocean safety education and lifesaving skills by instructed by certified open water lifeguards. This year marked an exciting expansion for the program with the introduction of the Sunset Bay Session in Coos Bay. The three-day intensive program provided instruction from certified open water lifeguards, focusing on ocean safety awareness, life-saving techniques and enhancing open water, board and paddling skills. “This program is the first and only open water junior lifeguard program in the State of Oregon,” said Luke Martinez Curry County’s Aquatic Safety Officer/Life-

Seven Wonders to perform free concert at Curry Public Library

Join composer and director Matthew Packwood for a string quartet performance of Oregon Origins: Seven Wonders, a musical journey through Oregon’s wild places, from Meyers Creek Beach to Steens Mountain, and many stops in between. The event will take place at Curry Public Library on Saturday, September 13th at 6 p.m. and is free and open to the public. String quartet members include Sofie Yang (violin), Hannah Willard (violin), Alicia Mora (viola), and Austin Bennett (cello). Following the live performance, geologist Ian Madin will give an illustrated presentation of the breathtaking locations that inspired the project. Special guest and Indigenous culture bearer Katrina Thompson-Upton will present on the Indigenous history and culture of the area.

Matthew Packwood is founder and executive director of Oregon Origins Project, an innovative arts and culture nonprofit which explores the ancient origins of the state of Oregon through creative expression. His string quartet Oregon Origins: Seven Wonders had its album release in early 2024 and continues to be performed across the state; his string orchestra work The Birth of Cascadia received its premiere in summer 2025. Packwood has been a Portland resident since 2007. Ian Madin grew up spending guard II. “Its focus instills in youth the importance of hard work and dedication, helping mold our future first responders and community leaders.”

Thanks to generous grant funding from the Southern Oregon Workforce Investment Board, and a small grant from the Oregon State Marine Board, the special Sunset Bay session was offered free of charge to all registrants.

“We would like to thank our regional and local partners for helping make this program possible,” said Martinez.

The Junior Lifeguard program's core mission is to equip young people with a deeper understanding of their open water environments, provide them with the skills to recreate safely and foster pathways within the maritime field.

Activities included open water swimming, paddle boarding, body surfing, surfing, kayaking, snorkeling and self-rescue techniques. Environmental respect is cultivated through lectures on aquatic topics, while self-respect is built through personal achievements and teamwork.

The program emphasized that it is not a learn-to-swim school. Prospective participants had to demonstrate minimum aquatic proficiency by successfully completing a swim test, which included: Swimming one-hundred yards continuously using the front crawl/freestyle stroke; Swimming ten yards underwater and treading water for three minutes.

The program boasts a team of professional instructors and lifeguards from Curry County Aquatic Safety and the California State Parks Trinidad Head Lifeguard Division, all possessing extensive experience in surf and ocean rescue, beach safety, First Aid and CPR.

They are supported by trained volunteers and Junior Lifeguard trainees to maintain a low student-to-instructor ratio.

Management staff includes Luke Martinez (Curry County Aquatic Safety Officer/Lifeguard II), Shannon Ingram (California State Parks – Lifeguard II/EMT) and Declan Debler (Curry County Aquatic Safety Officer/Lifeguard I).

“This year the program had over 130 participants between the three sessions, with students traveling from across the state and coming from as far as Arizona,” said Martinez. “We are very proud of our Junior Lifeguards and look forward to the future of our program’s development.” For further information, or contact staff, please inquire at quatic.safety@currycountyor.gov.

Erosion: The culvert under U.S. Highway 101 at Bearhead Mountain Lane is located about six miles south of Bandon. The two-foot-diameter pipe is about 20 feet below the road surface.

Detour: This map show the route one would have to take as a detour during construction.

it, so right now it's safe to drive over, but if we have more storms this winter it could make the entire road-way impassable, so we've got to get in there to get it fixed before the winter," said Denney.

The terrain adds a level of difficulty to this project. The highway is nestled between a mountain and a creek, which makes staging difficult. The stream running through the culvert is about twenty feet below the road surface. The depth of the culvert is beyond what traditional construction methods can accommodate and extensive excavation will be necessary.

ODOT will replace the 2-foot culvert with an 11-foot wide pipe that would meet federal fish passage requirements. The wider culvert will improve the crossing's capacity to carry drainage from large storm events.

The culvert, under U.S. 101 at Bearhead Mountain Lane, failed as a result of a high-water event in December 2024. The storm washed away the ground under the highway's southbound travel lane and required emergency repairs. The culvert is still at risk of failure, which could compromise the roadway above.

Prior to full closure, travelers can expect delays as only one lane of traffic will be open for a few weeks prior to and a few weeks after the major closure weekend as ODOT will begin construction preparation and roadway rebuilding.

"We know how disruptive highway closures can be for communities on the south coast, but we believe this is the best approach and the least impactful option in the long run," said Glen Pederson, ODOT's District Manager. "We're announcing the closure now because we want to give everybody as much time as possible to plan ahead."

As there is no local detour available, travelers between Crescent City and Coos Bay must use the detour through Grants Pass and Winston. Travelers must use U.S. 199 (Redwood Highway), Interstate 5 and Oregon 42 (Coos Bay-Roseburg Highway) to navigate around the closure.

"We'll send out more information as we get a tighter schedule," said Denney.

Oregon ditches farm stand regulations after public outcry

By CLAIRE CARLSON
Oregon Capital Chronicle

Oregon’s countryside comes alive during farm season. Tulips in the spring, berry-picking in the summer and pumpkin patches in the fall attract visitors to the bucolic farm stands that dot the Willamette Valley and beyond.

But as crowds have gotten denser, with reports of hours-long traffic on single-lane roads at the most popular farms, some legislators are seeking solutions to mitigate the effect of agritourism in agricultural zones.

A recent rulemaking process from the Department of Land and Conservation Development could have limited what can be sold at farm stands, but an outsized public response to the potential rules put the process on an indefinite pause.

Legislators are still deliberating over how to move forward with the rulemaking — or if they should at all, considering the controversy it caused.

One of the groups at the center of the debate was 1000 Friends of Oregon, a nonprofit organization that advocates for land use planning. They participated in the rulemaking advisory committee that was meant to inform legislators on a number of agritourism issues, not just farm stand policies.

The group said the pause was the result of a misunderstanding about what the rulemaking was intended to do.

“It’s not about saying no to things like agritourism,” said Anna Kemper, membership experience manager of 1000 Friends of Oregon. “It’s about managing impact, making sure that one farm’s business model doesn’t negatively impact others.”

From March to July, the rulemaking advisory committee convened monthly to discuss one or two agritourism issues and then make a recommendation to the Land Conservation and Development Commission, which implements state land use rules.

But in recent months, the discussion focused primarily on farm stand regulations after one of the members of the committee — the Oregon Property Owners Association — sponsored a bill that would have expanded what’s sold at farm stands.

The group’s goal was to address “longstanding confusion” over farm stand policies, like a rule that says three-quarters of a farm stand’s products must be sourced from the farm, but is unclear on what exactly counts under that rule.

But one Yamhill County farmer said the group’s goal to expand farm stand allowances would have “blown out the sideboards on farm stands.”

That’s according to Sid Friedman, a hay farmer and board member of the land use planning and policy organization Friends of Yamhill County. He served on a legislative working group that eventually led to the rulemaking process on farm stands.

Friedman was worried about the cumulative impact of using farm stands to sell not just farm products but other activities like weddings, concerts, and farm-to-table dinners in Oregon’s farmland.

“The cumulative impacts of all these commercial uses, which aren’t farming in the exclusive farm-use zone, is driving up the price of farmland here in Yamhill County and around the state,” Friedman said. “Somebody who just wants to farm can’t compete with what people who want to put in a commercial venue can pay for the land.”

These concerns led to the most recent feedback from the rulemaking advisory committee, which toned down the farm stand rules the Oregon Property Owners Association was pushing for. Notably, the feedback recommended an impact assessment on neighboring properties of any farm stand wanting to pursue agritourism activities.

DLCD was expected to release a draft rule to follow this feedback on Sept. 1. But in late July, several farms around Oregon rang alarm bells on social media about the potential rules, spurring more than 2,300 emails and phone calls from the public.

Two of the most vocal farmers against the rulemaking were Jim Abeles and Kat Topaz, owners of Topaz Farm on Sauvie Island. They were worried that the potential rules would harm people trying to start an agritourism business.

“It would be stricter and more expensive and more difficult for anybody who wants to get into agritourism,” Abeles said.

Topaz Farm, founded in 2020, serves as one of the main farm destinations for Portlanders. Beyond selling produce, it has a petting zoo, offers farm-to-table dinners and hosts a live music series in the summer.

The farm’s owners posted their concerns on social media about what the rules might do to farms like theirs, with one video surpassing a million views on Instagram.

They pointed to a decrease in the number of farms nationwide as one reason the rulemaking could further harm small and mid-size farm operations.

“We want more farms, we want more competition because we think that it’s good for agriculture, it’s good for the public, and it’s important while farms are being lost everywhere,” Abeles said.

Shortly after the public backlash about the rules, Gov. Tina Kotek ordered a temporary pause on the rulemaking process.

“I want to reassure farmers who have been anxious and frustrated about how proposed changes to existing rules regarding farm stand operations may affect their businesses that I hear you and am paying attention,” Kotek said in a public statement. “I have directed DLCD to pause the rulemaking process to allow for more conversations with all interested parties and the public on this really important agri-tourism issue.”

1000 Friends of Oregon is fine if the rulemaking process ends completely.

“I think if it just went away, we would be fine as far as farm stands are concerned,” said Jim Johnson, the organization’s working lands policy director. He’s more interested in working on other agritourism issues prioritized by the Land Conservation and Development Commission, like urban growth planning and the rezoning of agricultural land.

“We can get to work on more important issues that relate to protecting Oregon’s valuable farmland,” he said.

Trump officials plan to remove protections on 2 million acres of national forests in Oregon

By MIA MALDONADO
Oregon Capital Chronicle

Trump administration officials intend to remove protections and open to some development more than 58 million acres of national forests across 40 states, including 2 million acres of national forests in Oregon.

Brooke Rollins, head of the U.S. Department of Agriculture formally announced the proposed termination of a 2001 Forest Service rule known as the “Roadless Rule” in a news release Wednesday, setting off a 21-day public comment period that opens Friday and runs through Sept. 19.

The Roadless Rule prohibits road construction, logging and mining on about 30% of Forest Service managed lands, intending to protect wildlife, animal migration corridors, watersheds and old-growth from human development and the environmental degradation that often follows.

Rollins said that rescinding the rule would remove “burdensome, outdated, one-size-fits-all regulations” and boost economic growth. Trump earlier this year signed two executive orders to increase logging in national forests and other federal lands.

U.S. Forest Service Chief Tom Schultz, who previously worked for one of the country’s largest lumber producers in Idaho, said the Roadless Rule has frustrated land managers for years, and served as a barrier to commercial logging, and logging in the name of wildfire prevention, by prohibiting road construction.

“The forests we know today are not the same as the forests of 2001,” he said in a statement. “They are dangerously overstocked and increasingly threatened by drought, mortality, insect-borne disease, and wildfire. It’s time to return land management decisions where they belong — with local Forest Service experts who best understand their forests and communities.”

Research from Oregon State University Professor Chris Dunn, a forest ecologist and wildfire expert, and his colleagues, found most wildfires in Western national forests between 1984 and 2018 started near roads, showing an increased likelihood of wildfires where roads exist, because the number one cause of wildfires is people.

The news Wednesday angered Oregon environmental advocates, who are urging the public to submit comments to the USDA in opposition to the proposed rollback.

“Gutting the Roadless Rule — which has protected our forests for 25 years — would be the single largest rollback of conservation protections in our nation’s history,” said Tracy Stone-Manning, president of the Washington D.C.-based conservation nonprofit Wilderness Society, in a statement. “Americans cherish their public lands and deserve leaders who protect them for future generations, not give them away to corporations that exploit them.”

From the Willamette to the Ochoco National Forest, Oregon groups express urgency

Areas in Oregon protected under the roadless rule include Iron Mountain in the Willamette National Forest, Joseph Canyon in Wallowa County, Tumalo Mountain in central Oregon and Lookout Mountain in the Ochoco National Forest.

“These forests are some of Oregon’s most treasured landscapes, from the flower-studded meadows of Echo Mountain to the headwaters of Tumalo Creek, which provides Bend’s drinking water,” Oregon Wild’s central Oregon field coordinator, Sami Godlove, said in a statement. “Oregonians value these places deeply, and now is the time to raise our voices to ensure they remain protected for future generations.”

Oregon’s U.S. Rep. Andrea Salinas, a Democrat representing the state’s 6th Congressional District, said she is outraged by the Trump administration’s attacks on the rule.

In June, Salinas introduced the Roadless Area Conservation Act to make the Roadless Rule a federal law. Nearly 50 House colleagues, including Reps. Maxine Dexter and Suzanne Bonamici, Oregon Democrats, have cosponsored the bill, and she said she is working to get more. Oregon’s two other Democratic U.S. Reps. Janelle Bynum and Val Hoyle, and Oregon’s lone Republican Rep. Cliff Bentz, have not signed on as sponsors.

“These pristine, undeveloped forest lands represent some of our most important tools in the fight against climate change,” Salinas said in a webinar on Tuesday hosted by the Oregon Sierra Club.

Erik Fernandez, the wilderness program manager for Oregon Wild, said eliminating the Roadless Rule would be a disaster for Oregon’s forests and communities.

“Building new roads in these wild places opens the door to invasive species and habitat fragmentation,” he said. “Once these areas are cut apart, we lose the clean water, wildlife, and solitude they provide forever.”

Curry County Juvenile Department and Curry County Prevention will host Tall Cop Jermaine Galloway, national speaker on drugs and alcohol.

“I’ve seen the ever-evolving drug culture trends sweep across our country,” said Galloway. “For many people, it’s hard to keep up with these trends and especially to understand what they all mean. Unless you understand the culture, you won’t see it at all.”

His approach is more than standard as he addresses the cultural trend of what happens seasonally, like spring break, and how the ideology teaches a variety of substance abuse trends.

Galloway is motivated by his past experience as a police officer and the need to build better communities by spreading his wealth of knowledge and his ability to bring the issue to the forefront of people’s thinking.

According to his website: Tall Cop Says Stop™ was created by Officer Jermaine Galloway, an Idaho law enforcement officer since 1997. Regarded as one of America’s top experts in various drug and alcohol trends, he has specialized in underage drinking and drug enforcement for more than 15 years.

Addressing the issue means asking tough questions. “All over our nation, communities struggle to deal with underage drinking and drug usage. What can we do about these issues? Are we just going to meet up and ‘round table’ them every month? Or are we going to get out there and do something to fix the problems?” These are just some of the topic points that Galloway asks.

“I’ll give you tools to reduce, prevent or stop drug and alcohol abuse in your community,” said Galloway.

This free event will be at the Gold Beach High School Gym on September 9th from 1:30 to 3:30 p.m. and is open to the public.

Event goers are encouraged to register at: <https://www.wcognitoforms.com/currycountyprevention1/tallcopyregistrationcommunityevent>, but is not necessary to attend. “Remember, you can’t stop what you don’t know.”

Federal disaster assistance available

Governor Kotek’s office announced that Federal Emergency Management Agency (FEMA) has made federal disaster assistance available to the state of Oregon to support recovery efforts following severe storms, flooding, landslides and mudslides that struck Coos, Curry and Douglas counties in March 2025.

The assistance includes Public Assistance funding on a cost-sharing basis for state, tribal, and eligible local governments as well as certain private nonprofit organizations to aid in emergency response and infrastructure recovery.

While requested, Harney County was not included in this declaration by FEMA; however, state leaders recognize the situation in Harney was especially severe. The flooding breached levees and led to the failure of the only wastewater system serving the City of Burns and the Burns Paiute Tribe. Sewage-contaminated floodwaters caused serious public health hazards, damaged homes, and forced extended evacuations.

As a result, State Legislators provided statutory funding during the 2025 Legislative Session for Harney to minimize flooding through repair and improvement of infrastructure. This work will include work on dikes, levees, dredging and vegetation thinning along waterways.

“Our staff worked tirelessly, compiling damage assessments, coordinating with local jurisdictions and ensuring every detail was accounted for,” Oregon Department of Emergency Management Director Erin McMahon said. “Their dedication and advocacy for Oregon played a crucial role in securing this declaration and helping communities get needed assistance.”

Understanding Federal Assistance

Public Assistance (PA) is one of two main types of recovery dollars FEMA offers communities after a disaster. The other is Individual Assistance (IA). Neither are meant to help people cover the total cost of replacing their homes. Public Assistance is to help replace public infrastructure damaged by the disaster and recover the cost of responding to it.

Individual Assistance (IA) has a higher overall damage cost threshold than Public Assistance and acts as a supplement to insurance, savings or loans for individuals whose property is damaged or destroyed. Far fewer disasters qualify for Individual Assistance because the overall devastation has to be far greater and more widespread, and it was never meant to pay replacement costs.

Federal and State Assistance Available Currently for Oregon Communities Recovering from Floods

- Public Assistance: funding for emergency work and repair or replacement of public infrastructure such as roads, bridges, and utilities.
- U.S. Small Business Administration (SBA) Disaster Loans: low-interest loans for homeowners, renters, businesses, and nonprofits to cover physical damage and economic injury. People can apply online by visiting <https://lending.sba.gov>.
- U.S. Department of Agriculture (USDA) Farm Service Agency (FSA) Emergency Conservation Program (ECP): emergency funding and technical assistance to farmers and ranchers to rehabilitate farmland and conservation structures damaged by natural disasters and implement emergency water conservation measures in periods of severe drought.
- Oregon Legislature statutory funding: for Harney to minimize flooding through repair and improvement of infrastructure.

Damage Impacts in Coos, Curry, Douglas and Harney Counties

Flooding

Flood insurance provides financial protection against damage caused by flooding, which is not typically covered under standard homeowners or renters' insurance policies. It's a separate policy offered through the National Flood Insurance Program (NFIP) or private insurers, and it covers things like structural damage to your home and loss of personal belongings.

Because flood risk varies by location, coverage and rates are based on your property's elevation, flood zone, and more. Many people only discover it's excluded after it's too late, so it's worth checking before the storm rolls in. Oregon's Division of Financial Regulation has a good resource page to help the public navigate flood insurance.

- Coos County: floodwaters caused road failures and prompted water rescues. Officials noted damage levels not seen since the 1960s.
- Curry County: landslides and mudslides disrupted access and damaged infrastructure. SBA loans and other federal resources were requested to support recovery.
- Douglas County: highway 138 suffered at least 10 landslides, with major damage to drainage systems and roadways. Homes and businesses were inundated, and evacuations were widespread.
- Harney County: breached levees and led to the failure of the only wastewater system serving the City of Burns and the Burns Paiute Tribe. Sewage-contaminated floodwaters caused serious public health hazards, damaged homes, and forced extended evacuations.

Officer Dominguez – Brookings’ Community Resource Officer Builds Bridges and Fosters Trust

This story is part of a series highlighting Brookings City employees

By WENDY GIORDANO
City of Brookings Project Manager

Patrolling City parks, checking in with local businesses and connecting residents to essential resources, these are just a few ways Officer Gabriella “Gabby” Dominguez is making a difference in Brookings as a Community Resource Officer (CRO).

“Officer Dominguez excels as both a police officer and Community Resource Officer. Her initiative and determination brought National Night Out back to Brookings, creating valuable opportunities for our community, law enforcement, and other first responders to connect,” said Brookings Police Chief McCrae about Dominguez’s initiative. “Her work reflects the professionalism and community commitment we strive for at the Brookings Police Department.”

Unlike traditional enforcement roles, the CRO position is built on outreach, meeting people where they are, listening to their needs and connecting them to help.

Dominguez spends much of her time offering local resources to unhoused individuals and others in need as well as visiting businesses enrolled in the Brookings Police Property Program to alert owners to any unwanted activity nearby.

When asked what inspired her to become a CRO, Dominguez said, “I wanted to make a positive impact on the lives of people in our community and contribute to a safer, more connected environment. I strongly believe in bridging the gap between local law enforcement and the community, fostering trust and open communication.”

“Meeting all the new and familiar faces and engaging in great conversation is my favorite part,” said when asked what her favorite part of the job is. “I come from a small community similar to Brookings, and much like my hometown, everyone knows everyone. That’s a good resource to have.”

Dominguez is quick to point out that her work isn’t only about responding to problems, it’s about preventing them.

“I patrol our community, check in with our partners and try to be proactive,” she said. “My goal is to focus on our problem areas and help find solutions before things escalate.”

“I recently had the amazing opportunity to plan and successfully host a community event on August 5th. The event was National Night Out; an annual community-building event that promotes police-community partnerships and neighborhood camaraderie,” she said with a sense of pride. “We had local law enforcement, first responders and wonderful donors supporting the event. We’re already looking forward to planning next year and continuing to grow each year!”

“Gabby’s energy and optimism are contagious,” said City Manager Tim Rundel. “You can see it in everything she does in Brookings. Even though I’ve only known her a short time, I’ve been impressed by the positive difference she’s making in the lives of residents and the community as a whole.”

When she’s off duty, Dominguez enjoys spending time outdoors with her wife and her dogs, whether that’s a sunny walk or a day by the river. She hopes residents will stop and talk when they see her in town.

“I strive to be a good listener and a resource for our community members,” Dominguez said. “We can’t solve every problem overnight, but together we can make a positive difference.”
