

County has two COVID-related deaths

BY ZACK DEMARS
The Pilot

Curry County’s virus-related death toll has increased to five after two deaths in December were linked to COVID-19, county health officials announced this week.

Both of those deaths were connected to an outbreak at the Sea View Senior Living Community in Brookings. That outbreak has been linked to 28 cases of the virus and two deaths, as of data available Tuesday.

The county’s fourth death was of an 89-year-old man who died Dec. 20 at Curry General Hospital. His death was reported by the Oregon Health Authority Jan. 13.

The county’s fifth death was of a 79-year-old woman who tested positive for the virus Dec. 9 and died in her residence Dec. 18. Her death was reported by OHA Jan. 15.

Both individuals had some kind of underlying conditions, though health officials don’t specify what conditions in addition to COVID-19 may have contributed to someone’s death.

“Please remember, it is important that we all follow the OHA and CDC guidelines and governor’s directives about social distancing, wearing facial coverings in public buildings and protecting yourselves by staying home to slow the spread and save lives,” wrote County Public Health Administrator Sherrié Ward in a press release. “CCPH will continue to keep the public informed with all the information we can in order to keep our citizens safe.”

In total, Curry County has seen 324 cases of the virus since the pandemic began, according to OHA data available Tuesday.

Overall, the county’s cases have been declining in recent weeks. Last week, the county’s case count and positive test rate were low enough to allow it to loosen virus restrictions to the “moderate” level, the lowest level of restrictions in the southwest corner of the state.

Unsurprisingly, the majority of the county’s cases have been reported in the Brookings-Harbor ZIP code, which had seen 243 cases as of Jan. 13. The Gold Beach ZIP code reported 36 the same day, and Port Orford reported between 1 and 9, a number too low to be disclosed by state health authorities.

The county has also been continuing to vaccinate residents against COVID-19. Just over 750 people countywide have received their first dose of the vaccine as of Jan. 18, though the state’s data typically lags a few days.

Curry Health Network is currently vaccinating individuals in phase 1A, including health care workers and first responders, and is preparing to vaccinate a segment of phase 1B, including educators, child care workers and preschool workers. After that group, the hospital plans to vaccinate individuals 80 years and older.

Those eligible for the next phases of the vaccination, including educators and those over 80, can contact the hospital at 541-247-3119 or covidvaccine@curryhealth.org to be placed on a list for future scheduling. The hospital highly recommends emailing, as phone lines are busy.

Baker is new Curry treasurer

Commissioners pick Port Orford resident from five talented candidates

BY DAVID RUPKALVIS
The Pilot

Curry County has a new treasurer after county commissioners voted 2-1 to offer the job to Douglas Baker, who lives in Port Orford.

Baker was one of five candidates who interviewed with commissioners last week and was one of three initially recommended by commissioners.

Commissioner John Herzog said Baker was his No. 1 choice after the interviews while Commissioner Chris Paasch sided with David Barnes and board Chair Court Boice opted for George Rhodes.

Paasch voted against appointing Baker to the position, but made it clear his opposition was not anything against Baker but rather a clear preference for Barnes.

“We have in my opinion, two very qualified people to be treasurer that are hands down, in my opinion, way overqualified to be county treasurer,” Paasch said.

Outgoing Treasurer Debbie Crumley sat in on the interviews and agreed the candidates were very strong.

“We had five candidates that were all really good,” Crumley said. “I looked at the persons who were here that we could work with, who could work with the team we have. I have to say David Barnes, he did a great job. He’s been a mentor to me. He’s positive and I appreciate that.”

In an effort to get a consensus on the board, Herzog said he preferred Baker with Barnes as his second choice. Boice said Baker would be his second choice.

“When I say I was impressed with the level of applicants, that was genuine,” Boice said. “My second choice would be Mr. Baker. He’s from the north county, which needs some representation.”

After speaking, Boice said he would change his choice to Baker.

Herzog then made a motion, which Boice seconded. The 2-1 vote appointed Baker as treasurer. He will serve through the end of 2022. To continue after that, he would need to run for election.

“My hesitancy with Mr. Baker was his understanding of districts and economic development,” Paasch said. “Do I think he could get up to speed on it? Yes. I find very little wrong with Mr. Baker, but I just feel Mr. Barnes is my five-star candidate.”

After the vote, Barnes addressed the board, thanking them for the opportunity. He also volunteered to work on a budget committee and also said he would be willing to go through training with Baker in case he might be needed in the future.

Baker officially started Jan. 19.

New commissioner is learning on the job

BY DAVID RUPKALVIS
The Pilot

John Herzog has been thrown into the fire. The newest member of the Curry County Board of Commissioners started the job Jan. 4 and has had four meetings that ran more than 20 hours combined.

He laughed last week as he thought about his first two weeks on the job.

“It would be easier to go cut a cord of wood, split it, load it and unload it than these meetings,” he said. “I’ll relate it to this, ‘It’s like drinking from a fire hydrant.’”

Herzog, who had a long career as a UPS driver in Curry County and spent the last six years as the housing manager for the Good Samaritan Society said he was long interested in county government and decided early in 2020 to make his first run for elected office.

“I’m a Christian,” he said. “I asked the Lord if He wanted me to do this. I’ve always had a little interest. So, I told the Lord, ‘I’ll try this and if You want me to do it, I’ll know in November.’”

Herzog was one of three people to run for the seat in the nonpartisan election. In the primary, Herzog finished first in a three-person race, but because he did not receive 50 percent of the vote, he was forced to a runoff in November.

That race, against incumbent Sue Gold, was not as close as Herzog received 53 percent of the vote to win the election.

In his first two weeks on the job, Herzog has tried to be the peacemaker between board Chair Court Boice and Commissioner Chris Paasch. Herzog said he hopes to unite the board for the benefit of the county.

Wyden addresses virus, infrastructure in town hall

BY ZACK DEMARS
The Pilot

Economic relief, infrastructure and health care were key points of discussion for Oregon Senator Ron Wyden during a town hall for Coos and Curry counties Jan. 15.

“This is a chance to just listen and learn, and in particular I think what I’ve learned is especially relevant now is that Oregonians in Coos and Curry County want to be able to control their economic choices and their destiny,” Wyden told the audience, fluctuating between 60 and 80 listeners to the online event.

Through video appearances and live comments, area residents peppered the senator with questions, most relating in one way or another back to improving the region’s economic outlook.

In response, Wyden responded by committing to use his power as the incoming chair of the powerful Senate Finance Committee for a variety of initiatives — lambasting the outgoing Trump administration and praising President Joe Biden along the way.

The town hall started with the news that COVID-19 vaccines the federal government had promised to ship to states wouldn’t actually be coming as planned.

“I feel like this is just another deception from the Trump administration,” said Joy May, a Port Orford resident who addressed Wyden during the town hall. “Perhaps a deadly deception.”

Wyden agreed.

“The last 36 hours are sort of symbolic of how the Trump administration — from playing down the virus on day one, to zigging and zagging even on clarifying what the responsibilities were of the federal government and the states — now on their way out the door, they have given us a unique combination of lies and incompetence,” Wyden said.

State alters its vaccination plan

BY MONIQUE MERRILL
Country Media

On the heels of learning that Oregon will not be receiving the shipment of vaccines from the federal reserve it had expected, state plans to vaccinate school staff and seniors ages 65 and older have changed.

Instead of opening vaccination eligibility to those groups Jan. 23, school staff will be eligible for vaccinations starting Jan. 25 and only seniors over age 80 on Feb. 8.

On Jan. 12, U.S. Department of Health and Human Services Secretary Alex Azar announced the full reserve of vaccines would be released to states and encouraged state leaders to expand vaccine eligibility. Gov. Kate Brown and other state officials learned Jan. 14 that Oregon and other states will not receive increased shipments of vaccine, “because there is no federal reserve of doses,” she said.

In a press conference Jan. 15, Brown said the discovery that Oregon would not be receiving the expected shipment of vaccine doses from the federal government was shocking and called it “deception on a national scale.”

“I am shocked and appalled that the federal government would set an expectation with the American people on which they knew they could not deliver — with such grave consequences,” Brown said. “While the Trump Administration pulled the rug out from under us like a cruel joke, let me assure you that Oregon’s priorities, my priorities, have not changed.”

Instead of opening vaccination eligibility up to all residents over the age of 65, the eligibility criteria for seniors will be divided into four waves. The first wave will open up to seniors ages 80 and older starting Feb. 8.; the second wave opens up to people over 75; the third to people over 70; and the fourth phase to people over 65.

Specific dates on when the second, third and fourth phases may begin were not specified.

Part of the reasoning behind prioritizing teachers and school staff before seniors is due to the size of the two groups and the ongoing push by Brown to resume in-person classes.

“I made the decision to prioritize our educator personnel because I am absolutely committed to getting our children, our students, back into the classroom as quickly as possible,” Brown said.

Pat Allen, director of the Oregon Health Authority, estimated there are approximately 100,000 people in Oregon who work in school settings, and an estimated 800,000 people in the state age 65 or older.

“While we want to vaccinate seniors as soon as we can, our ability to immunize this vulnerable population depends on getting enough doses from the federal government,” Allen said. “We must have the supplies we’ve been promised.”

Brown said vaccinating school staff is expected to take around two weeks, and Allen said original plans estimated it would take around 12 weeks to vaccinate seniors ages 65 and older with the expected vaccine shipment from the federal government.

While it seems no official dosage numbers were promised by the federal government, Allen said the state was expecting between 135,000-225,000 additional doses of both the Pfizer and Moderna vaccines.

Approximately 2.8% of the state has been vaccinated thus far, Allen said. To reach community immunity, between 70% to 80% of the state needs to be vaccinated.

With COVID-19 raging around the world, many have forgotten about another illness that just 20 years ago was seemingly as dangerous.

But for 12,000 people in Oregon and a small group of people trying to help people with it, HIV is still a very big deal.

The Port Orford Library was one of two in Curry County to receive national recognition recently.

GB, Port Orford libraries honored

Curry County is known beyond its boundaries for its cranberries, its rivers and salmon, its coastline and increasingly it is garnering national attention for its libraries. The most recent recognition for the libraries’ successes was the December 2020 “Star Library” designations announced by the leading magazine for libraries, Library Journal.

This year, the libraries in Port Orford and Gold Beach each received stars. The accomplishment is particularly remarkable considering there were only six star libraries named in Oregon, two in Washington and nine in California. Other Oregon libraries earning stars included Multnomah County Library in the Portland area which serves over 800,000 people, the Eugene Public Library, the Garden Home Community Library (in the Portland metro area), and the Union Carnegie Public Library in Union. Curry County’s libraries are in good company. Gold Beach’s library director, Jeremy Skinner, said the fact that two county libraries made the star list is evidence that countywide collaboration is reaping great rewards for our library users.

So what do the stars mean and how are they awarded? Star Library ratings are based on data from the federal Institute of Museum and Library Services annual Public Library Survey. In Oregon, the data is collected by the State Library. Because of the amount of time required to gather and assess the data, each year’s star library rating is based on data from two years prior to the year of the rating. So, for this year, the star ratings are based on data from fiscal year 2018.

Stars for the rankings were assigned by taking seven key per capita metrics and comparing libraries with similar budgets. The metrics that were measured include: physical circulation; e-material circulation; library visits; program attendance; public computer use; wifi sessions; and electronic retrievals.

The data for the Gold Beach library painted a picture of a library that is well used and vital to its community. For example, Gold Beach circulated 14.57 physical items per person and community members visited the library on average 16.77 visits per year. Free wifi service at the library continues to be a crucial community service. In Gold Beach, the public use the wifi on average 2.38 times per year.

Overall, for libraries with annual expenditures between $200,000 and $400,000 per year, Port Orford was the 12th highest ranked library in the United States, and Gold Beach was the 27th highest ranked library. Port Orford Library Director Denise Willms said she is proud of the achievements of the Port Orford Library and that the past year has pointed out how crucial library services are to people in Curry County.

HIV Alliance continues serving Oregonians

“No judgement whatsoever. That really is a key point to it. Building that rapport and trust is huge.”

Dane Zahner, HIV Alliance

To keep people safe, the HIV Alliance has a needle transfer program where people, often drug users, can turn in used needles and get new ones for free. With a goal of keeping people safe, the HIV Alliance does not question a person’s lifestyle.

“We don’t judge anybody,” Zahner said.

In 2020, the HIV Alliance gave out 1.4 million new needles around the state to keep people for sharing and re-using needles.

The alliance also offers HIV and hepatitis C tests, and if a person tests positive, the organization steps in as case manager to get help.

Between 40 and 45 percent of their clients are homeless, but Zahner said there is still ways to help.

The HIV Alliance helps people get insurance, housing and medical care.

One of the biggest ventures is getting Naloxone into people’s hands to save lives. The Naloxone drug is used to reverse overdoses before a person dies. In Coos and Curry counties, the HIV Alliance works with police to make sure officers are carrying Naloxone and know how to use it. They also train those on the streets, users themselves, and give them Naloxone kits.

“We educate our clients,” Zahner said. “We tell them, you need to call 911. You’re not going to get arrested, you’re not going to get in trouble. I think it’s good police are carrying Naloxone. It shows a lot of compassion.”

Zahner said the HIV Alliance knows the Naloxone kits it hands out saved 600 lives last year and possibly more.

Right now, the HIV Alliance also has another way to help. Thanks to a grant from the Southwest Oregon United Way, the alliance is giving out food bags and Fred Myers gift cards to people who come for help.

“All we want to do is safeguard people,” Zahner said. “We’re out and about every day. We try to connect with people.”

In Curry County, the HIV Alliance is at the Curry

County Health Department every third Thursday from 1-4 p.m. Every fourth Wednesday, they are in Brookings at St. Timothy’s.

The alliance does testing in Coos County and will be starting a syringe exchange program in February.

“No judgement whatsoever,” Zahner said. “That really is a key point to it. Building that rapport and trust is huge. Everything we offer as an agency is absolutely free. There’s no charge.”

The HIV Alliance has been working in Oregon since 1984 and is funded through grants and donations.

Zahner admitted that few people think of HIV these days unless it impacts them personally, but he said that should change.

“It should still be on their minds,” he said. “There’s a high prevalence of HIV and hep c in Oregon. We want to find care for them because it’s treatable. There’s more risk going on because people do not stop having sex, they don’t stop doing drugs.”

The city of Brookings recently announced a new partnership has been formed with CourseCo to manage the daily operations at Salmon Run Golf Course. CourseCo currently manages 39 golf courses in six states including Oregon, Washington, California and Montana.

CourseCo has a strong track record of successfully managing municipal golf courses. Brookings City Council President John McKinney said “In my opinion, Early Management Team did a great job getting the course on the right track, and now we are excited to pass that torch to CourseCo. CourseCo has an incredible reputation, coupled with their vast resources we expect great things coming in Salmon Run’s future. Wyden

In response, he pointed to Biden’s COVID-19 response plan which he said includes a national strategy for expanding production and administration of vaccines, as well as additional economic relief.

That relief was a key topic Friday, too, as people asked what options were still available for financial assistance, grants and funding. Wyden said he’s hopeful Biden’s plan for additional $2,000 relief checks will pass a soon-to-be-Democratically controlled Congress swiftly.

“We’re hoping to get that passed very quickly, in a matter of weeks, and I think the systems are now set up to get it out very quickly — again weeks after a decision is made,” Wyden said. “For a lot of Oregonians, it’s really a lifeline.”

Support for local public health departments was another area of Biden’s virus relief plan Wyden highlighted.

Renee Menkens, a member of the board of Coos County Friends of Public Health, told Wyden about the need.

“I’ve seen how budgets have changed in supporting our health department,” Menkens said. “But one of the issues with our public health services is funding, and as staff are being realigned to do more contact tracing and vaccine distribution and screenings, some of the other mandated services are not being able to be met as much as they would like to.”

Wyden responded by saying the revenue lost from tax cuts for high-paid executives should have been used to support public health departments instead.

“I think those folks have a size-seven halo over their heads,” Wyden said. “The question now are we going to write budgets that put our gratitude into the kinds of tools they need to do their job for vulnerable people?”

Infrastructure was also a key focus of questions posed to the senator.

“I think we’ve all learned during this pandemic how critical broadband is for so many things,” Coos County Commissioner Melissa Cribbins told Wyden. “The coast really struggles, as do many other rural areas, with adequate broadband.”

In response, Wyden noted a benefit included in the latest COVID-19 relief package that will provide funds for broadband expenses for low-income households once that program launches in the next several months.

But he also said expanding rural access to internet will be a priority while he’s in charge of the Senate Finance Committee.

“I want folks on the coast to know that every single time the word infrastructure comes up in Washington DC,” Wyden said, “I’m going to insist that broadband, especially rural broadband, be part of the equations.”

Other infrastructure questions focused on the water.

“My question is very local,” said Bill Divens of Gold Beach.

He went on to tell the senator the challenges his fishing business faced since the Rogue River hadn’t been dredged this year, and asked what Wyden could do to help. Wyden again pointed to certain tax cuts, saying instead that revenue could be spent on local infrastructure projects.

“What this is really all about, it’s a question of priorities,” Wyden said.

Several attendees also asked Wyden about several environmental issues, including the possible expansion of the Smith River National Recreation Area into Southern Oregon. Wyden’s proposed conservation public works program for unemployed workers and the roll-back of some environmental protections by the Trump administration.

In response, he said Congress should consider ways to protect the environment in ways which support the local economy and community. Increasing natural recreational opportunities could support the South Coast’s economy, Wyden said.

“Recreation is a big economic engine. It’s a big economic multiplier,”

Wyden said.

In all, Wyden reminded attendees he seeks their perspective on issues faced by South Coast residents. Members of his staff can assist residents in navigating federal COVID-19 relief programs, too.

“I want folks to know our doors are open,” Wyden said. “As far as I’m concerned, the discussion with Coos and Curry County is going to be in the ‘to be continued’ department.”

Wyden’s Medford office can be reached at 541-858-5122.

County seeks budget committee members

Due to a term expiration and a resignation, Curry County is seeking a resident of north and of central county who would like to serve on the Curry County Budget Committee. Because this is a staggered three-year term, the north county term will expire December 31, 2022 and the central county term December 31, 2023.

Budget Committee members are responsible for reviewing the proposed, annual county budget and making budget decisions pending final approval by the Board of Commissioners prior to the start of the 2021 -2022 fiscal year on July 1. The Budget Committee meets in the spring for several daytime meetings.

Applications can be found at the Curry County website: www.co.curry.or.us. Or a paper application can be attained by calling 541-247-3296.

The Curry County Board of Commissioners will appoint the Budget Committee members at a public meeting in February. Applications are due not later than February 12.

Herzog

“I just want to serve and bring some continuity and some unity to the board,” he said. “I grew up here and married my high school sweetheart here.”

Herzog, who jokes he didn’t even know where the courthouse bathrooms were when he was sworn in, admits he has a lot to learn about Curry County government. But he said he is eager to get the knowledge and benefit the community he loves.

While this is his first foray into politics and government, he has served on boards before and understands the role he is filling. He said it is important for commissioners to move on as soon as votes are made, even when they are on the losing side of a vote.

“One thing we have to do as a board of commissioners is show that solidarity, even if you vote against something,” he said. “If you’re outnumbered, still at the end of the day you support the decision of the board. That’s key.”

Hertzog said he has heard some say he is partial to Boice, but he disagrees. While Boice did support him during his election, he said he votes how he feels on each issue.

“I will vote my heart, and my decisions will be made according to what I feel is the best way to go at that time,” he said.

One big controversy Herzog stepped into was a discussion about removing the position of director of operations. Herzog said he ran with that goal in mind, but now he is slowing down.

“I’m not saying I won’t vote for change, but right now I want to keep the status quo while I learn,” he said.

Despite some of the controversy, Herzog said he is happy to be on the board. He said he hopes to be available to the people and to find ways to improve their lives.

“County government is one of the purest forms of government,” he said. “People can come in and make public comment on any issue.”

As Curry County moves ahead, Herzog said the biggest issue is overcoming COVID-19. And he knows from personal experience.

Late last year, Herzog and his wife both were diagnosed with COVID. While his symptoms were minor, he watched his wife struggle for a month.

He also wants to focus on the budget and just get to know the departments he helps oversee.

“I want to familiarize myself with my liaison appointments and those folks,” he said. “We’re on lots of different advisory committees and stuff throughout the county.”

He said being a commissioner is his only job, and he plans to work full-time to help Curry County excel. Right now, that means working with Boice and Paasch and coming in every day ready to cooperate.

“I love them both,” he said of his fellow commissioners. “They are both professing Christians, so that’s part of it. We don’t have to agree on everything all the time, but we do have to get along.”

Wild steelhead angling all should be catch-and-release

BY KYLE SMITH
Trout Unlimited

William Ruckelshaus, the first administrator for the Environmental Protection Agency, famously said, “Nature provides a free lunch, but only if we control our appetites.” This wisdom is relevant to the Rogue South Coast Conservation Plan for salmon and steelhead, which aims to ensure southern coastal Oregon populations of these fish remain robust and continue to provide angling and harvest opportunities into the future.

Leonard Krug (letter, Jan. 4) reminds us of the value of steelhead fisheries to Oregon coastal communities. These iconic fish are critical to the culture and economy of our state and support a robust industry during winter months in which tourism is at low ebb. However, as wild steelhead stocks continue to decline in many watersheds in the Pacific Northwest and remain at-risk everywhere due to a variety of factors (including climate change-driven changes in precipitation and in marine conditions), we should emphasize angling opportunity over harvest in managing coastal steelhead fisheries – especially of currently viable wild steelhead stocks.

As a lifelong angler, I have worked with Mr. Krug and others to develop or refine management solutions for South Coast salmon and steelhead through this conservation plan. In Oregon, harvest of wild winter steelhead is unique to the South Coast (and two rivers on the mid-coast). But due to a woeful lack of population monitoring, we don’t have a good idea of how many wild fish return to South Coast rivers from year to year, nor how many fish are harvested each year.

Wild steelhead are a precious, vulnerable resource and are the cheapest and most ecologically sustainable way to provide steelhead angling opportunity. But if we don’t know how many there are in southern Oregon coastal streams, or how many are harvested by anglers, managing them sustainably is impossible. Much like you wouldn’t continue spending from your bank account if you didn’t know your income or your account balance, we must be conservative about harvesting wild steelhead on the South Coast until we know with more accuracy how many return each year.

Ultimately, it’s the opportunity to catch wild steelhead – not kill them – that will keep bringing anglers back to the South Coast. The argument that angler participation is low on steelhead streams with catch and release only regulations is simply not true. One need only look to the Umpqua River, where, since 2014, all wild steelhead caught must be released, to find one of the most popular (and crowded) winter steelhead rivers in the country. A change to catch and release only for wild steelhead on the Umpqua was championed by fishing guides, who have documented more and larger wild steelhead brought to hand since then. I, for one, hope we can continue wild steelhead harvest on the South Coast, but we need more data to ensure wild harvest doesn’t put the future of these fish at risk.

In the 1990s, NOAA Fisheries conducted a status review of steelhead in the Klamath Mountain Province, the region that includes the South Coast. The report concludes “[t]he Klamath Mountains Province steelhead ESU [Evolutionary Significant Unit] is not now at risk of extinction, but if present trends continue, it is likely to become so in the foreseeable future... Conserving existing diversity within this ESU should be a key component of recovery planning.” Ensuring enough wild steelhead reach their spawning grounds is crucial to preserving genetic diversity – much better monitoring of both adult return numbers and overall harvest of wild fish will be required to achieve this goal. Until we have this data, we need to proceed cautiously and control our appetites.

your neighbors? What will happen when it comes for you? Who will be here to defend you? We have created this monster and have no way to stop it. I am a Christian, and I know who holds my future and where it will be, but I am still concerned enough to write this letter, hoping someone way smarter than me, will find a way to solve this extremely dangerous direction that our country is heading.

Thank You.

Stand up against Heard

In a recent letter, I recounted how our State Senator Dallas Heard (R-Roseburg) openly encouraged a mob of some 300 heavily armed right-wing thugs to invade the State Capitol in Salem during a special session last month. They attacked state troopers with bear spray and smashed glass doors in what turned out to be a preview of the seditious Jan. 6 insurrection in Washington, D.C., in which a police officer was murdered.

Unconcerned about similarly endangering the lives of Oregon officers (and his own colleagues), Heard promptly dove even deeper into far-right radicalism. He helped launch a group called Citizens Against Tyranny that encourages local business owners to defy state COVID-19 restrictions, including mask mandates.

In Heard’s own colorful words, residents who file complaints about non-compliant businesses are “extremists,” “bullies,” “cowards” and “rats.” Two Douglas County women were publicly fingered as “filthy traitors” on Heard’s group’s website – their names splattered with red, signifying blood. (One had reported employees not wearing masks at the Reedsport Safeway, hardly a locally-owned business. The other denied reporting anyone.)

These are Heard’s own taxpayer constituents he’s so viciously attacking – in fact, the November election results indicate there’s a 68.8% chance they voted for him. Now his group has deliberately exposed them to harassment and potential violence. That’s fine with Heard: “Their faces and their names and what they did must be known.”

Heard plans to raffie off his sports car to fund the vigilante group and is demanding that every Douglas County officeholder sign on to their cause. County Sheriff John Hanlin calls that “threatening” and “coercion” and rejects Heard’s fanaticism.

So should we here in Curry. Heard was not elected to endanger private citizens, cops, legislators or seniors who stand for compliance with the law. His behavior disgraces his oath of office.

Postal Patience

One of the unfortunate byproducts of the pandemic has landed squarely on the backs of our local postal workers.

You likely remember their adopted motto: “Neither snow nor rain nor heat nor gloom of night stays these couriers from the swift completion of their appointed rounds”

But on closer inspection, Amazon was nowhere to be found in that promise.

If you are like me, your mail likely has been arriving late into the evenings. I have to admit I bristled when enduring the long line that consumes most of a lunch hour when a package too large for my box means a trip to the post office to pick it up. I used to get an attitude about all of that until someone wised me up to what is transpiring behind the scenes.

Due to folks avoiding brick and mortar stores due to the China virus and ordering online to keep safe, our folks in blue have been for a good long while stretched to beyond capacity. Working late, working consecutive shifts, with vehicles that are in shabby condition.

In larger cities, Amazon has fleets of trucks helping to make those deliveries but in rural towns like Gold Beach the postal service has to make those runs.

This means our hard working mail deliverers are working overtime, correction - FREE time - often several hours after their scheduled shifts in order to get all these parcels to your door.

It amounts to slave labor and it is not right.

Their mighty union is of no use on this matter and due to budgetary constraints at the USPS there is no monies available beyond straight pay.

Just know this if you are getting your mail at 8 p.m. these folks started at 7 a.m. and aren’t getting home to their families until later than that and again, with no financial compensation whatsoever.

So when you see your mail courier it might make their day if instead of a growl you offered them a smile and a “thank you.”

Helping so many

The Curry County Suicide Awareness and Prevention Council held our first meeting of 2021 recently. During the Veterans Task Group report, Media Council member Kelly Schellong mentioned that there was an opportunity to assist with providing coats for local kids through the annual Bicoastal Media’s “Coats For Kids” drive!

And WOW — what a surprise — Linda Valerio and veteran Mark St. James connected with Miss Kelly and transported dozens of coats to Brookings!

Port Orford’s Holiday Cheer leaders/Veterans Task Group members (DAV’s local commander), David Lawhon and veteran Sindy Flores have been facilitating a clothing exchange since late fall, with goal that this will remain a long-term effort. Along with the Elk’s Lodge’s Shoe Bank donations and the newly formed clothing exchange, the Bicoastal Media “Coats for Kids” coats other clothing and shoes are currently being distributed in Port Orford, Gold Beach and Brookings. On Fridays, Buddy Checks are accompanied by lunches provided by St. Tim’s!

Gold Beach Veterans Task Group members and Holiday Cheer Leaders are Mr. and Mrs. Anthony Tirado; Brookings coat distribution helpers are Mr. and Mrs. Skip Hunter.

Thank you ALL and especially the Curry County Suicide Awareness and Prevention Council’s members and its media and Veterans Task Groups for helping over 25 kids (so far!) and 20 adults by spreading good cheer, providing coats, clothing comfort and holiday joy! Plus, members donated $630 to help homeless folks, some who are veterans.

Our Veterans Task Group still is asking folks who want to help homeless veterans to consider sending a cash donation in support of Curry County Veterans Service Officer Tony Voudy’s annual effort to provide Winter Weather Cold Kits (survival gear) for our unhoused veterans. To send in a donation, please make checks out to Curry County. Please designate your contribution by noting CVSO Homeless Veterans Support and mail (or drop off) to 94235 Moore St. #122, Gold Beach, OR 97444. Wild Rivers Community Foundation’s holiday partnership grant and private contributions has brought us to half of CVSO Voudy’s $5,000 goal.

Other Holiday Cheer Leaders included Robert Barker and St. Tim’s Community Kitchen Team and Homeless Task Force’s Community Healthcare team Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Slattery; father and son team Jason and veteran Loren Farmer; and veterans Paul Hoynacki, Max Rusk, Calvin Casey and Daniel Moses. Watch for more good news and encouragement for our veterans most in need in the coming months!

With much love and gratitude we salute all of you!

Jordan Cove project dealt setback

BY ZACK DEMARS
The Pilot

NORTH BEND — The Jordan Cove project has hit another roadblock. On Tuesday, the Federal Energy Regulatory Commission declined to allow the project to proceed without the blessing of Oregon’s Department of Environmental Quality. “The order finds that Jordan Cove and Pacific Connector never requested certification with respect to the Commission authorizations for the Jordan Cove Energy Project and that the Oregon Department of Environmental Quality could not have waived its authority to issue certification for a request it never received,” FERC staff wrote in a summary of the order. That means Pembina, the company behind the project which proposes to build the West Coast’s first liquefied natural gas terminal, will have to continue seeking water quality certification from state regulators before the project can be built and operated on Coos Bay. In March, the same federal commission gave the project a controversial green light to advance — but only on the condition that the company succeeded in acquiring several state and local permits first. Some of those permits — including the water quality permit in question — had already been denied. Before Tuesday’s meeting, Pembina asked the commission to rule the state had waived its authority to certify the project’s water quality compliance, one of the conditions of FERC’s March approval. But the FERC’s five members, made up of three Republicans and two Democrats, unanimously declined to do so. The decision comes on the heels of several other setbacks for the project. Earlier this month, the state’s Land Use Board of Appeals invalidated a permit issued by the City of North Bend, ruling the city erred in how it classified the company’s plans to drill beneath the Coos Bay Estuary. In December, the same board found permits issued by Coos County didn’t properly take into account the project’s proposed wastewater facility and the use of the bay’s public navigation channel.

Both of those decisions, unless appealed in court by the company, mean the permit applications must return to city and county leaders for further review. Reaction from a handful of community leaders, residents and environmental activists was supportive of the commission’s decision, which was originally expected later in the month but came instead on the last full day of the Trump Administration. “Today’s unanimous FERC decision shows that when our communities come together and speak out, we win! Thousands of southern Oregonians have raised their voices to stop this project for years and will continue to until the threat of Jordan Cove LNG is gone for good,” wrote Hannah Sohl, executive director of Rogue Climate, in a press release. “Now we must focus on creating good, local jobs in clean energy and energy efficiency in Oregon.” The terminal, if eventually constructed, would be the end point for about 230 miles of pipeline across the state, starting in Malin on the state’s southern border. That plan has faced the objections of landowners and tribes along the pipeline’s planned path. “The FERC decision is very encouraging. It is certainly our hope that Pembina will give up on this devastating project once and for all,” said Don Gentry chairman of the Klamath, Modoc, and Yahooskin Tribes. Oregon Senator Ron Wyden expressed his support for the commission’s decision in a press release Tuesday. “Today marks a big win for protecting the South Coast because it reinforces our state’s environmental laws and reflects local community input,” Wyden wrote in a press release. “From Day One with this project, I have insisted that Oregonians receive a fair, open, fact-based, and non-political process while FERC determines whether LNG projects are necessary and in the public’s best interest — including strict adherence to the Clean Water Act. Today’s unanimous decision by FERC is good news and the logical conclusion of that process.” Representatives for Pembina did not respond to a request for comment in time for publication.

Curry County artist showcased in Newport

The Oregon Coast Council for the Arts presents “A Segment of Art” exhibit from Jan. 16 through March 20 in the Coastal Oregon Visual Artists Showcase (COVAS) at the Newport Visual Arts Center. “A Segment of Art” will feature award-winning wood sculptures by Brookings-based artists Dan Gray. The COVAS Showcase features artists from the Oregon coast, rotating through the coast’s seven coastal counties, and Gray will be representing Curry County. The COVAS Showcase will be open on Wednesdays and Saturdays, noon to 4 p.m., COVID-19 safety guidelines permitting, as well as online at www.coastarts.org.

Gray’s turned wood artworks, which he describes as “segmented sculptures,” have won multiple awards and have been displayed in numerous galleries on the West Coast. Many of his sculptures are inspired by his proximity to the Pacific Ocean as well as his love of travel. One of his signature pieces, “Nautilus, Station 5,” was featured in Wood Magazine. Gray’s wood sculptures have been described as amazing in their intricate detail. Working with oak, alder, mahogany, purple heart and myrtle woods, his sculptures contain anywhere from several hundred to several thousand individual wood pieces.

Gray is a proudly self-proclaimed self-taught artist.

“In truth, I never knew I was an artist until late in my life. That fact that I was always creating, I simply took that for granted as part of who I was,” Gray said. “My creativity was out of necessity. To repair something that was broken. To build something needed.”

Though Gray has always worked with wood, he did not always realize wood as an art medium. Fifteen years ago, on a whim, Gray purchased a wood lathe.

“From that first moment, when I turned a small piece of wood into a bowl, I was lost,” he said. “Nothing has ever captured me before in the way of that first small bowl.”

Gray has displayed his art in galleries in Vancouver, Wash., and in Brookings, and he is currently displaying in Juniper Sky Fine Art Gallery at the Kayenta Art Village in Ivins, Utah, and well as The Turquoise Turtle Gallery at the artist colony in Tubac, Ariz. In addition to creating his segmented wood sculptures, Gray is also a writer and has published two novels and a collection of short stories.

Curry County artist receives grant

One Curry County artist received a grant last week as part of the Artist Relief Program created by the Oregon Arts Commission in partnership with Oregon Community Foundation and the James F. and Marion L. Miller Foundation.

The Curry County winner was part of 646 artists statewide who received grants ranging from $1,000 to $5,000.

“Artists are the creative core of our communities and help define who we are. They inspire us to innovate, to learn and grow,” said Brian Rogers, executive director of the Oregon Arts Commission. “We are thankful to be able to provide support as our artists continue to suffer great losses due to the pandemic. While the requests far exceeded available funds, we hope the awards will help artists sustain their practice until better times arrive. We are extremely grateful to our partners at Oregon Community Foundation and the Miller Foundation for making this program possible.”

Nina Ventra of Port Orford, who specializes in multidisciplinary art, was awarded $1,000.

“The relief applications submitted by working artists across Oregon demonstrated both the deep need and courageous resilience in our arts communities,” said Jerry Tischleder, Oregon Community Foundation’s program officer for arts and culture. “It’s crushing to recognize all that has been lost and I’m humbled that OCF could play a role in mending a portion of the damages. I applaud the review panels across the state who dug in to direct how funds would be allocated – it was hard work that couldn’t have been done without broad community input.”

Rigorous management improves groundfish stocks

A new paper published in Nature Sustainability, "Identifying Management Actions that Promote Sustainable Fisheries," demonstrates that rigorous management practices have helped rebuild depleted fish stocks world-wide and underscores the fact that greater investment in fisheries management generally leads to better outcomes for fish populations and the fisheries they support.

The Pacific Fishery Management Council, which manages commercial and recreational ocean fisheries on the West Coast, was one of two dozen international management and research entities collaborating on this study.

The study was led by Michael Melnychuk, research scientist at the School of Aquatic and Fishery Sciences at the University of Washington. Management practices and outcomes adopted by the Pacific Council to rebuild West Coast groundfish stocks contributed to the study. "Rebuilding these overfished stocks was a painful process for West Coast fishermen," said Pacific Council Executive Director Chuck Tracy. "This study shows that their short-term sacrifices paid off in the long run, leading to more sustainable fisheries for future generations."

"Rebuilding these stocks required collaboration between a lot of different people, from fishermen to scientists to environmentalists," said Pacific Council Chair Marc Gorelnik. "It was a tough process, but in rebuilding these stocks, we also built long-lasting, valuable relationships. Responsible fisheries management requires sacrifices, but it pays off. This is a really hopeful story."

Nine of ten West Coast groundfish stocks have successfully rebuilt since the stocks were declared overfished or depleted in 1999. Most recently, the stock of cowcod south of 40°10' N lat. was declared rebuilt in 2019, decades ahead of the expected date. Only one stock, yelloweye rockfish, is under a rebuilding plan, and yelloweye are rebuilding faster than expected, according to the 2017 rebuilding analysis.

Beginning in 2000, the Pacific Council adopted stringent management measures to achieve stock rebuilding success, including large area closures; low annual catch limits, quotas and harvest guidelines; gear modifications; retention prohibitions or limitations; and adaptive management practices responsive to closely monitored fishery impacts and stock fluctuations. Such management practices are key to promote sustainable fisheries, according to the University of Washington study.

According to Melnychuk, the study confirmed what many researchers already expected.

"In general, we found that more management attention devoted to fisheries is leading to better outcomes for fish and shellfish populations," he said. "While this wasn't surprising, the novelty of this work was in assembling the data required and then using statistical tools to demonstrate what everyone has always taken for granted to be true."

The research team used an international database that is the go-to scientific resource on the status of more than 600 individual fish populations, or stocks. They chose to analyze 288 stocks that generally are of value economically and represent a diversity of species and regions. They then looked over time at each fish population's health and management practices and were able to draw these conclusions:

- Where fish and shellfish populations are well studied, overall fisheries management intensity has steadily increased over the past half century.

- As fisheries management measures are put in place, fishing pressure is usually reduced back toward sustainable levels, and stock abundance is usually allowed to increase.

- If fish stocks become depleted as a result of overfishing, a rebuilding plan may be put in place. These plans tend to immediately decrease fishing pressure and allow stocks to recover.

- If fisheries management systems are strong enough, then overfishing can be avoided and large, sustainable catches can be harvested annually, rendering emergency measures like rebuilding plans unnecessary.

The study builds on previous work that found, by using the same database, that nearly half of the fish caught worldwide are from stocks that are scientifically monitored and, on average, are increasing in abundance. The new paper takes a closer look at specific management actions and how they have impacted fishing pressure and the abundance of each stock examined, Melnychuk explained.

The international research team looked at a spectrum of fish stocks, such as hakes in South Africa and Europe, orange roughy in New Zealand, tuna species on the high seas, anchovies in South America and scallops off the Atlantic coast of North America. Most of the stocks they examined had a history of being depleted at some point, usually due to historical overfishing.

On the West Coast, for example, a Pacific Council rebuilding plan for canary rockfish specifying very low annual catch limits was put in place in 2000. The plan affected every West Coast fishing sector that targeted groundfish stocks, and all West Coast fishing communities that were dependent on groundfish fishing.

In order to reduce fishing pressure on canary rockfish, the Council prohibited or limited fishermen's ability to retain groundfish, required gear modifications and created Rockfish Conservation Areas that stretched the length of the entire West Coast. In these areas, fishing at certain depths and using certain gear types was prohibited.

The Council also made constant adjustments to management measures to manage the catch of canary rockfish. These actions significantly reduced the harvest rate of canary rockfish, leading to a full recovery of the stock by 2015, which was decades ahead of the original rebuilding target.

Currently, the canary rockfish stock is estimated to be as large as it was in the 1960s when the stock was lightly exploited.

The University of Washington study omits fisheries that lack scientific estimates of stock status, even though these account for a large amount of the world's catch, including most fish stocks in South Asia and Southeast Asia.

This research was funded by The Nature Conservancy, The Wildlife Conservation Society, the Walton Family Foundation and a consortium of Seattle fishing companies.

ful bidder shall have no further recourse. Notice to Potential Bidders If you are considering bidding on this property lien, you should understand that there are risks involved in bidding at a Trustee auction. You will be bidding on a lien, not on the property itself. Placing the highest bid at a Trustee auction does not automatically entitle you to free and clear ownership of the property. You should also be aware that the lien being auctioned off may be a junior lien. If you are the highest bidder at the auction, you are or may be responsible for paying off all liens senior to the lien being auctioned off, before you can receive clear title to the property. You are encouraged to investigate the existence, priority, and size of outstanding liens that may exist on this property by contacting the county recorder's office or a title insurance company, either of which may charge you a fee for this information. If you consult either of these resources, you should be aware that the same Lender may hold more than one mortgage or Deed of Trust on the property. Notice to Property Owner The sale date shown on this Notice of Sale may be postponed one or more times by the Mortgagee, Beneficiary, Trustee, or a court, pursuant to Section 2924g of the California Civil Code. The law requires that information about Trustee Sale postponements be made available to you and to the public, as a courtesy to those not present at the sale. If you wish to learn whether your sale date has been postponed, and, if applicable, the rescheduled time and date for the sale of this property, you may call In Source Logic at 702-659-7766 for information regarding the Trustee's Sale or visit the Internet Web site address listed below for information regarding the sale of this property, using the file number assigned to this case, CA05000933-19-1. Information about postponements that are very short in duration or that occur close in time to the scheduled sale may not immediately be reflected in the telephone information or on the Internet Web site. The best way to verify postponement information is to attend the scheduled sale. Notice to Tenant NOTICE TO TENANT FOR FORECLOSURES AFTER JANUARY 1, 2021 You may have a right to purchase this property after the trustee auction pursuant to Section 2924m of the California Civil Code. If you are an "eligible tenant buyer," you can purchase the property if you match the last and highest bid placed at the trustee auction. If you are an "eligible bidder," you may be able to purchase the property if you exceed the last and highest bid placed at the trustee auction. There are three steps to exercising this right of purchase. First, 48 hours after the date of the trustee

Second, you must send a written notice of intent to place a bid so that the trustee receives it no more than 15 days after the trustee's sale. Third, you must submit a bid so that the trustee receives it no more than 45 days after the trustee's sale. If you think you may qualify as an "eligible tenant buyer" or "eligible bidder," you should consider contacting an attorney or appropriate real estate professional immediately for advice regarding this potential right to purchase. SON-IN-LAW'S DISTRACTION MAY BE MORE THAN FORGETFULNESS

DEAR ABBY: I'm responding to the letter from "Open-and-Shut Case in Virginia" (Oct. 20), who complained her son-in-law was "disrespectful" because he didn't close cupboard doors, cereal boxes, etc. My guess is that "Kirk" is displaying classic symptoms of Adult Attention Deficit Disorder (AADD). Multistep tasks may be difficult for him to complete because he is easily distracted.

My husband has this. (It was not diagnosed until he was in his 50s, and I had nearly torn all my hair out.) He still occasionally leaves cabinet doors and drawers open. I tease him that he can't remember to walk from one side of the room to another if he forgets to take his medication.

I strongly recommend that Kirk be evaluated by a behavioral psychologist for AADD. Treatment may save the relationship between Kirk and his in-laws. -- WIFE OF A MAN WITH A.A.D.D.

DEAR WIFE: Thank you for your letter. I received a deluge of responses about the letter from "Open-and-Shut Case in Virginia," and the vast majority of the writers mentioned ADD, ADHD and AADD. Many of them recommended patience on the part of the in-laws and volunteered that Kirk may be able to manage the disorder if he is diagnosed.

DEAR ABBY: I am a 73-year-old retired woman who still maintains contact with a number of old and new friends for movies, dinner, museum visits, etc. Until the COVID virus, we did things often. Now, not so much.

Someone in this group told me that on a couple of occasions, a few of them were not very nice when my name came up. ("Why doesn't she see her grandkids more often?") "She goes out more than most, yet doesn't want to eat in certain restaurants.") My husband and I have a good marriage, but many of these ladies are widowed or divorced. How do you handle backstabbing at this age? -- MYSTIFIED IN NEW YORK

DEAR MYSTIFIED: Try not to take it personally. Obviously, these gossips have less to occupy their minds than one would hope. You might also consider seeing these particular individuals even less often than you already do in the age of COVID. If you do, it may give them less ammunition concerning what you do (or don't do) with your time.

DEAR ABBY: I began using a wheelchair two years ago. Since then a dear friend of roughly 30 years has become fixated on my disability. While we once shared a deep, close "BFF" relationship, she now speaks to me in baby talk and only shows an interest in my physical limitations. I feel objectified, hurt and disappointed.
I have mentioned to her that I prefer to focus on other things in life, and she responds with plat-itudes like, "The body is just a shell," and "All that matters is the heart," but her actions tell me otherwise. I hate to end this friendship, but I am at the end of my rope. Any advice? -- PATRONIZED IN ARIZONA

DEAR PATRONIZED: If you haven't done it already, tell this person that you no longer wish to discuss your disability and you prefer she stop raising the subject and treating you differently. Period. If she continues to pursue the subject after that, make your visits less frequent, if they happen at all.
