

Man arrested for murder of teen

By BREEANA LAUGHLIN
The Pilot

A man is in custody on charges of murder in the second degree of a 16-year-old male who was shot and killed in Brookings on July 11.

Francisco Villegas-Lopez, 18, was taken into custody on Thursday, July 28 without incident and lodged in the Curry County Jail.

The Brookings Police Department and the Curry County District Attorney’s Office applied for and were granted an arrest warrant for Villegas-Lopez. He was located while walking on 5th street in Brookings at 7:46 p.m.

The arrest stemmed after weeks of intensive investigation. Police discovered the body of the deceased victim after receiving a 911 call in the early morning of Monday, July 11, on Hemlock near Fern Street. The major crimes team was then activated.

The Brookings Police Department is thanking the many community members who assisted in this apprehension.

“Our homicide investigation continues to be the greatest focus of our resources with a significant number of hours spent by nearly every officer in this department conducting follow-up interviews and furthering evidence collection,” reported Brookings Chief of Police Kelby McCrae in a recent update to the Brookings City Council.

The police chief said further information regarding the homicide case would be released to the public as it comes available.

This investigation is ongoing. If anyone has further information regarding this homicide, contact the Brookings Police Department at 541-469-3118.

Candidates face-off in gubernatorial debate in Welches

By HERB SWETT
Country Media

The candidates for governor of Oregon debated state issues Friday in a forum before the Oregon Newspaper Publishers Association in Welches".

Debating were Democrat Tina Kotek, former speaker of the Oregon House of Representatives; Republican Christine Drazan, former minority leader of the Oregon House; and independent Betsy Johnson, a former state senator.

Four Oregon newspaper executives questioned the three. Here are their paraphrased statements.

Opening remarks

Drazan:
I am originally from Klamath Falls. My family was less stable than they would have liked, too dependent on natural resources. They talked about politicians leaving people behind.

Kotek:
I began public service at the Oregon Food Bank. I have focused on having a positive impact on people’s lives. Families are worried about making ends meet

Johnson:
I believe we’re losing the Oregon that we love. I call for common-sense change. My allegiance is to Oregonians, not to any party or vested interest.

Responses to panelists’ questions

Q: The timber industry is declining. What steps would you take?

Kotek: When all parts of our state are successful, we’re all successful. I’d work with the communities to make sure we could use timber products.

Drazan: My dad worked in a veneer plant that went away. We’re grateful that the tech industry stepped in, but it must become more productive. Support the state as a whole.

Johnson: I visited the Elgin Veneer Plant and worked to save jobs when the Department of Environmental Quality wanted to shut them down. We must manage forests so they don’t burn down.

Q: We hear of homelessness as a crisis. What would you do?

Kotek: I have a five-point plan on my website for shelter for homeless. We have increased shelters quickly.

Johnson: I reject the notion that Tina is the only one working on homelessness. I made Wapato Jail a place of healing and hope. We’re getting more tent cities.

Drazan: As a freshman representative, I focused on youth homelessness. I passed second-home legislation, and more than 70% finished high school because of it.

Q: How did Wapato work?

Johnson: We have a track record of success. We have to stop fighting over what is best.

Kotek: I was glad my bill to streamline efforts worked. We need more housing.

A long line of law enforcement boats jetted up and down Rogue River last week.

The jet boat drivers maneuvered their crafts into small channels and through strong currents, performing emergency stops and securing their boats to rocks along the river shores.

The boat drivers, and their instructors, were taking part in a weeklong training designed to teach law enforcement, fish and wildlife and fire personnel the skills to safely operate their watercraft in emergency river scenarios.

The jet boat operations training was hosted by the Oregon State Marine Board on July 25 to 29.

“This is critical training for marine law enforcement and first responders,” said Ed Persichetti, the training coordinator for the Oregon State Marine Board Boating Safety Program.

The marine board contracts officers to uphold the law on waterways and the keep the waters safe, said Persichetti. Those who complete the training become the qualified boat jet operators tasked with carrying out these duties.

Curry County’s wild and scenic Rogue River is a prime spot for the yearly safety training for a number of reasons.

“We have the support of the sheriff’s office – which is always a bonus. And the support of the community – which is always a bonus,” said Persichetti.

Plus there is plenty of water to maneuver and work around in the Rogue River.

“It is such a dynamic waterway. We have 42 miles to stretch our legs – if you will – and train individuals,” he said.

Last week’s training included more than 40 participants (including instructors and trainees)

Thousands flock to county fair

There was plenty for fair-goers to see and do at the “Gold Pans and Cattle Brands” themed Curry County fair this year. More than 7,000 people took part in the fair, which was held from July 27 to 30, in Gold

Beach. The fair featured a new carnival, bull riding, live music, magician shows, livestock shows and auction, a chance to see exotic animals and more. “Community members were so happy and supportive,” said event center manager Kaitlyn Coleman. “It was a really successful event.” Violet Peterson, 6, right, of Nesika Beach, enjoys an ice cream cone after getting her face painted at the Curry County Fair on Saturday, July 30.

Drazan: We have invested between $1.5 billion and $2 billion on housing. The reasons hotels and motels shut down were COVID-related.

Q: Regarding the Greater Oregon issue, how do we address that concern?

Johnson: That’s a clarion call to do something about it. People who feel disrespected need our attention.

Drazan: We’ve had single-party control too long. Rural and urban issues must be noted. All parts of the state must be respected.

Kotek: We have large swaths of our state that are not listened to. Public policies have different impacts on different parts of the state.

Johnson: On Tina’s website, someone said that a Confederate flag at a rally showed racism.

Kotek: I’m not calling people at those rallies racists, but inclusivity is needed.

Q: Weather problems are getting worse. How would you address them?

Drazan: Oregon continues to be a leader in climate issues; we transitioned out of coal. We also need to preserve our dams. Had cap and trade passed, gasoline would have cost $3 more.

Kotek: We have to mitigate the issues but also promote wind power

Johnson: We need to lower the carbon footprint but not at the expense of farmers. Manage forests better. Be sure offshore winds don’t hurt fishermen Drazan: We need checks and balances. We pushed the responsibility for cap and trade to all Oregonians. It was a monstrosity of a bill.

Kotek: I’m not hearing solutions. When you have as big an issue as climate change, failure hurts all Oregonians.

Q: What would you do about the struggle for the poor to fight mental health issues?

Kotek: Oregon is at the bottom of the list of states for affordable care.

Johnson: We are so lackadaisical about drugs that we’re making the problem worse.

Drazan: We must make it easier for people with drug problems to come to Oregon.

Q: Do you support state laws on abortion?

Johnson: Tina and I voted pro-choice. Christine is anti-choice. Tax money should not be used for abortions.

Drazan: I’m pro-life. I’ll enforce laws uniformly. Roe v. Wade doesn’t seem to apply to that.

Kotek: Abortion is healthcare. Dobbs was a wake-up call.

Q: What steps would you take for gun safety?

Drazan: The Second Amendment is law. We have universal background checks and safeguards.

Kotek: The priority for the governor is to keep people safe. My opponents have voted against background checks.

Johnson: I’m a responsible gun owner. Raise the age for certain weapons from 18 to 21.

Q: High tech is a big player. Why is Oregon missing out on such growth, with that big Intel plant placed in Ohio?

Kotek: Expand high tech and broadband. I have a personal relationship with the Intel CEO.

Johnson: I talked with Intel executives, who said, “Answer the damn phone.” There were warning signs.

Drazan: We have some of the worst tax laws in the United States. Oregon is stronger when business is better.

More than 40 participants from 18 different agencies took part in the annual jet boat operations training on the Rogue River in Gold Beach.

Training

from 18 different agencies. Up to 19 different jet patrol boats were running the river at any given time during the training.

This year, the law enforcement training was held in conjunction with the Oregon State Marine Board’s quarterly meeting. For the first time ever, members of the marine board had the opportunity to witness the training firsthand.

The board members were invited to take part in an exercise with trainees as they learned to shallow jump into the water off the back of the jet boats on Wednesday, July 27. This sort of belly-flop technique allows the person jumping to keep their head above the surface of the water, and hopefully their bodies above rocks and other potential hazards, should they need to enter the water in an emergency situation.

Curry County Sheriff John Ward was present at the July 27 training. Sheriff Ward said he is a big supporter of the program, and always tries to participate in at least one day of the training each year.

Local training instructors included Curry County Senior Deputy Walter Scherbarth and Deputy Jared Gray; and Coos County Sergeant Will Coleman.

As long-time jet boat operators, these instructors are tasked with teaching their trainees how to navigate the waters efficiently, effectively and safely.

“The goal for trainees is to get the expertise from the instructor and build their own skills and techniques,” said jet boat operations training instructor Nate Thompson, a sergeant with the Clackamas County Sheriff’s Office.

Thompson said he took the training 15 years ago, went home and perfected his jet boat skills, and came back as an instructor a few years later.

“As an instructor, it’s about figuring out what the trainees’ baseline skillset is and then building off of that. Sometimes people come into it already knowing how to read the water well. Other times we need to teach them that along with driving the boats,” Thompson said.

“Throughout the course of the training, they learn how to navigate these types of water safely – and there’s a lot that goes into that,” he said. “These boats don’t drive like cars. It’s a lot different. It’s all about throttle control and steering.”

Thompson’s trainee, Clackamas firefighter Sandor Pongracz, said he felt like his head was on a swivel during the training.

“Every day is a little different. There’s wind. There’s the glare from the sun. There’s wakes from the big tour boats. So your head is on a swivel all the time as you read up the river and down the river – all while there is chatter on the radio,” Pongracz said. “It’s mentally exhausting because you don’t want to have any catastrophes and you are always trying to do your best.”

The trainee said his takeaway has been to slow down.

“These things have a lot of power and speed behind them but that’s not always what you need to get up and down the river correctly,” he said. “Anybody can drive really fast – but if you can do it slowly and accurately to get to a target in the water – that takes skill and that takes practice.”

Law enforcement training supervisor Persichetti said instructors purposely put their students into challenging positions.

“I have been doing this a long time, and you never pick somebody up that needs to be rescued in any easy spot – there is a reason why they are stuck there. So we are constantly putting students into tight quarters with difficult maneuvers to try to perfect their skills – so that when they do go home and there is a rescue they can facilitate it,” he said.

Fur Ball raises funds for animals

The first ever Fur Ball fundraiser attracted a huge crowd. The event at the Brookings Elks Club on Saturday, July 20 was sold out.

Community members came out dressed to the nines for The South County Humane Society’s inaugural Fur Ball fundraiser on Saturday, July 30.

The sold-out event included a cocktail hour, fashion show, a silent and live auction, music, and speeches from Brookings city councilmember Brad Alcorn, and his wife, South Coast Humane Society’s Executive Director Jenifer Alcorn.

Brad Alcorn gave Fur Ball participants an inside perspective into the life of his spouse that they may not have known about. The Humane Society Director has also been a world-champion female professional boxer, trained fire-fighter and personal fitness expert.

These days, most of Jenifer Alcorn’s time is spent making sure her and her family’s dogs are happy, along with caring for all of the animals at the shelter, her husband said.

“When your executive director gets to work, she is doing the physical work it takes to have a clean kennel, a clean shelter and to make sure all of the animals are taken care of. That is absolutely her number one priority and I hear about it every day,” Brad said.

“All of you are lucky because you will never find somebody who has a better work ethic, better commitment to rescuing animals and a better commitment to her community than my wife,” he said.

After Brad gave his wife praise for her commitment to the South Coast Humane Society, Jenifer Alcorn praised her staff, volunteers and board.

“I cannot say enough about my staff,” she said. “But the one thing I can tell you about the Humane Society is that the past board put us in an awesome financial position by paying off our thrift store. This past year, I had an employee (Donna Nielsen) come back to us that is one of the most awesome people I know.”

Donna Nielsen, the thrift store director, was awarded a gift certificate at the Fur Ball in recognition of her work.

“The thrift store is really our backbone and the reason why we are able to do as much rescue as possible,” Jenifer said.

After dinner and speeches, emcees Ted Fitzgerald and Jim Trost announced the silent auction award winners and Fur Ball guests listened to music performed by the Aurora Band.

The event was hosted at the Brookings Elks Lodge.

Full-Throttle Fishing Comes to the Oregon Coast

Nick Young shows off a colorful China rockfish. Nick has expanded his guiding operations across the west, from Arizona's Lake Havasu to the Oregon coast.

Redtail surfperch are a common catch along the Oregon coast. These slabs were caught on full anchovies intended for Chinook salmon in the Rogue River Bay.

Jaxon Young caught this exotic-looking red Irish lord while targeting rockfish and lingcod in the Pacific Ocean off Gold Beach.

Fishing guide Nick Young and his son, Jaxon, have taken their business to Gold Beach, where they are targeting salmon, rockfish and lingcod. Here, they show of a nice limit of black rockfish with fishing columnist Jordan Rodriguez.

During his first season guiding on the Oregon coast, Nick Young is focusing most of his trips on Chinook salmon, which gather in the bays of the Rogue River and other freshwater inlets before making their upstream journey to spawn.

There's a new fishing guide in town—one whose unorthodox methods have introduced countless anglers to “full-throttle fishing” across Oregon and the West.

Meet Captain Nick Young, owner and operator of Nick Young Outdoors. I first met Nick years ago, when his guide business was headquartered at eastern Oregon's Owyhee Reservoir, a remote but well-known trophy bass fishery. About five minutes into my first trip with Nick, I realized he does things a little differently—and for his friends and clients, that's a great thing.

Nick goes all-out for his clients on every trip. He also has a particular talent for finding BIG fish. At Owyhee, he put hundreds of anglers on the biggest bass of their lives. One evening, he and I caught an incredible 25-pound bag of largemouth that would've won just about any tournament in the Northwest.

When the pandemic stifled business at Owyhee, Nick moved south to Arizona's Lake Havasu and quickly found success guiding for bass, striped bass and trophy red ear sunfish (his clients have already caught multiple sunfish over five pounds!). Havasu is a special fishery—I experienced it firsthand over spring break—but it hits a summer lull when temperatures soar into the 100s. Nick's search for cooler weather and new opportunities led him to Gold Beach, where the prime fishing months overlap perfectly with the Havasu heatwave.

When Nick told me his Gold Beach salmon trips were up and running, I couldn't wait to check it out. My family and I made the trip from Idaho over Fourth of July weekend to visit family in Brookings and, of course, go fishing.

My brother-in-law Steve and I met up with Nick on a cool, overcast morning, ready to troll for Chinooks in the Rogue River Bay. Serving as first mate was Nick's son, Jaxon—essentially a hilarious, 8-year-old carbon copy of Nick.

“More salmon are arriving here every day,” Jaxon explained as we launched. “Peak season will be here before you know it!”

Nick rigged up whole anchovies so they spun as we trolled. I took a moment to appreciate the redwood forests, ocean rock formations and basking harbor seals surrounding us. What an awesome setting for a fishing trip!

On our second pass, something fishy bumped my bait. It didn't act like a salmon, and when Jaxon's rod also got a bite, I knew something was up.

Sure enough, Jaxon and I reeled up a pair of big redtail surf perch. Steve and I caught perch from shore during my last visit to the coast, but we were shocked to see them gobbling up six-inch anchovies.

“Aggressive buggers,” Nick smiled. “Let's put some in the cooler.”

We stayed atop the school and quickly jigged up a dozen nice perch. The bigger ones were pushing three pounds! We wanted to save our anchovies for the salmon, so I put my chewing gum on the hook, and BAM! Another big perch on. We laughed. And, with dinner in the box, we continued our salmon troll.

It was a slow day for Chinook action (which has picked up considerably since), and the next time we reached the edge of the bay, I watched Nick scratch his chin while gazing out at a nearly glass-calm ocean. I knew what my friend was thinking before he said it.

“If there's a day we could take this boat out there, it's today,” he said. “And you're here. Let's do it!”

Nick didn't have an ocean-worthy vessel at the time, but with Poseidon in a friendly mood, we ventured out to sea in his river boat. Fortunately, Nick knew a good spot just a half-mile offshore. When we arrived at a promising rockpile, we dropped large swimbaits rather than the small jigs most guides use.

Jaxon was the first to hook up. It was impressive to see the little guy handling a 10-foot baitcasting rod like a boss. Moments later, I landed a nice black rockfish. Things went quiet for a minute, but Nick broke the silence with his trademark phrase: “GIANT!!!”

I grabbed the net as Nick battled a monster lingcod. Sadly, it came unhooked, but the excitement was far from over. For the next two hours, fish were coming aboard nonstop.

Lingcod. Exotic-looking China rockfish. A red Irish lord. And big black rockfish—by far the best quality I've ever experienced. On my last Pacific visit, Steve and I sifted through dozens of rockfish to earn our limits of respectable keepers. This time, I caught 15, and all of them were 3-to-5-pounders that fought like smallmouth on steroids and fried up like a delicious cross between walleye and cod.

Not even a bout of near-seasickness could knock the grin off my face. Nick was smiling, too. His swimbait hunch was a winner, and he was already formulating a unique, exciting take on saltwater bottom fishing—one that he's refined, with incredible results, in the short weeks since.

“Just you wait, buddy,” he beamed. “We're getting this dialed in! Big baits. Trophy fish. Light tackle. Salmon, rockfish, lingcod, all of it. And full throttle fishing, just like always.”

I have no doubt Nick (and Jaxon) will succeed in Gold Beach. He's as talented an angler as I've met, and he knows the grind it takes to establish a winning reputation. Before long, I'm sure anglers up and down the coast will learn what I've known for some time.

No matter the water, no matter the species, you should never pass on a chance to go fishing with Nick Young Outdoors. Tight lines!

Teddy is just that...a big teddy bear. He gets along with other dogs that like to play nice. He knows basic commands; sit, down, stay, leave it, drop, come, and shake. He takes treats gently, is crate trained, and housebroken. He can be wary of strangers, but is loving and loyal! He has not been exposed to cats.

Eddie is shy and would do well in a quiet home with not a lot of sudden movement. He is not a lap cat but loves living indoors. If you want a cat that isn't in your face, this is your guy. Eddie enjoys living on the coast. He is our Tom Selleck of the Cat House, (with all his handsome smoothness).

4 sources of pet pain

When an animal is in pain, its owners may find it challenging to determine the root of its discomfort. Unlike people, companion animals cannot verbalize where it hurts or what is wrong. In fact, some pets may not even exhibit signs they are in distress.

Cats, dogs and other domestic pets are prone to the same types of pain that humans experience, according to Animal Health Associates in Michigan. Pain may stem from illness, injury or other causes. Here's a look at four potential sources of pet pain.

1. Underlying diseases

Diabetes, cancer and hyperthyroidism can cause pain in animals that may present as a lack of appetite in pets. Therefore, if your pet seems less enthusiastic at meal time, make an appointment with a veterinarian to rule out disease as the culprit.

2. Dental and oral issues

Gum disease, tooth infections, sores, and other oral issues could cause distress in a pet and also may compromise its ability to eat. Inadequate nutrition could make a pet weak, which leads to its own issues.

3. Arthritis and joint pain

Older dogs and those with genetic predispositions to conditions like hip dysplasia may have chronic pain. Difficulty getting up from seated or prone positions may showcase some of that pain. Pets with such conditions may not partake in activities they once enjoyed.

4. Post-operative pain

Animals recuperating from a surgery may experience pain. Veterinarians often prescribe pain medication to mitigate this issue, but some pain may bleed through. A pet in pain may be more lethargic or may be snippy and aggressive.

It could take some trial and error to determine if a pet is in pain. Any behavior that goes against the norm could be a sign of illness, injury or underlying pain.
