By LINDA LEE
Curry Coastal Pilot

The vibrant beauty of the Southern Oregon coast will once again be celebrated during the annual Azalea Festival, taking place this Memorial Day weekend, May 23rd through 25th.

This long-standing tradition, recently honored with the prestigious "Oregon Heritage Tradition" award, promises a weekend packed with family-friendly activities in the picturesque town of Brookings.

The festival, deeply rooted in the stunning display of native azaleas at Azalea Park, which is home to some specimens over two hundred years old, has been a Memorial Day weekend staple since 1939. The timing perfectly coincides with the peak bloom of these vibrant flowers, providing a breathtaking backdrop for the weekend's festivities.

This year's theme, "Expect the UnExpected!", hints at a fresh wave of excitement alongside beloved traditions.

The weekend kicks off Friday night with a lively dance party in Azalea Park. Saturday morning will see the return of the popular Azalea Festival Parade, winding its way through downtown Brookings.

Following the parade, attendees can explore the bustling Street Market Fair, featuring over eighty vendors offering a diverse array of goods, from vintage finds to locally handcrafted treasures. Throughout the weekend, Azalea Park will also host a series of free concerts.

Adding a new dimension to the festivities this year is the inaugural "Brookings Got Talent" show, scheduled for Sunday in Azalea Park. This family-friendly event invites

Chetco Library Completes Health and Wellness Study, Forms Walking Group, Opens Summer Reading Registration

By LINDA LEE

The Chetco Community Public Library District is celebrating the successful conclusion of a two-year community health and wellness study, made possible through a two-part grant from the Oregon Health & Science University (OHSU).

The initiative, which began in June 2023 with a $10,000 grant, aimed to explore the health benefits of low-impact exercise and foster well-being within the rural Brookings community.

The first $5,000 of the grant enabled the library to launch its own health education programs.

Spearheaded by Library Services Manager Erik Dongelmans, the library formed the Imagine Walking Group, a weekly gathering that encouraged residents to walk together and discuss the positive impacts of exercise and community connection on their health.

Participants in the walking group also contributed to OHSU's ongoing research into the health experiences of rural residents engaged in walking and community activities.

According to participants, the weekly walks yielded tangible health benefits, including lower blood pressure, reduced stress levels and improved mobility.

Tory Bowen, a member of the group, shared, "I've created some friends here that have expanded beyond just the walking group and has opened me up to conversations and points of views I wouldn't have otherwise."

The library further utilized its portion of the funding to promote healthy lifestyles through various initiatives. These included the distribution of free pedometers, the introduction of chair yoga classes, the acquisition of dance mats for future programs, a speaker series focused on healthy eating and lifestyles and the addition of wellness-themed books and resources to the library's collection.

The second $5,000 portion of the OHSU grant was put in the hands of the Imagine Walking Group participants, who collectively decided to award the funds to the City of Brookings.

The contribution will support the city's ongoing efforts to expand the east side walking paths within Azalea Park,

Tereza Golombková will provide piano accompaniment for Kyllian, Andrew, and Alexis during the performance.

Adding an extra layer of artistry to the afternoon, the concert will conclude with a performance by Dr. Alexander Tutunov himself. A long-time favorite in the Brookings community, Dr. Tutunov is known for his remarkable talent as well as his engaging humor and wit, promising a delightful experience for all attendees.

This free concert offers a unique opportunity to witness the bright future of classical music and celebrate the dedication and passion of these young artists.

Dr. Tutunov's international acclaim includes First Prize in the Belarusian National Piano Competition and recognition as a Laureate of the Russian National Piano Competition. His presence underscores PPA's commitment to nurturing young talent and bringing world-class musical experiences to the region.

Launched by the collective spirit of eight local, music-loving couples, the annual series has become a cornerstone of the region's cultural landscape.

The PPA was founded by a group of Crescent City high school alumni and teachers with a vision to strengthen the vitality of their community. The organization invests in educational opportunities, builds shared community resources for Del Norte and Curry counties, celebrates the region's cultural heritage and environmental splendor and aims to be a regional hub for civic and educational gatherings.

For over a decade, the Southern Oregon University (SOU) Music Recital Hall has resonated with the masterful sounds of world-renowned pianists, thanks to the enduring vision and generosity behind the Tutunov Piano Series.

Named in honor of the esteemed pianist Dr. Alexander Tutunov, the series has consistently presented an impressive roster of international artists. Under Dr. Tutunov's expert curation and warm hosting, audiences have been treated to performances by luminaries such as Garrick Ohlsson, Joseph Banowetz, Francesco Nicolosi, Antonio Di Cristofano, Ivona Kaminska and Christopher Bowlby.

Each season features a rich program of six to seven performances, thoughtfully blending the artistry of established, world-class musicians with the fresh talent of rising star young pianists. These captivating performances are brought to life on a magnificent Dual Action Model D Steinway Concert Grand piano, a prized instrument valued at approximately $170,000.

This exceptional piano, shipped directly from the Steinway & Sons factory in Queens, New York City, made its auspicious concert debut on May 22, 2015, during the Tutunov Piano Series Concert 5. Its acquisition was made possible through the significant contribution of local benefactor and arts patron, Dr. James Havstad, who generously donated it to the University.

Adding a personal touch to the acclaimed series, Dr. Alexander Tutunov, who enjoys a substantial local following, graces the stage at least once each season. These performances often feature collaborations with other instrumentalists, further enriching the musical tapestry of the series.

The public is warmly invited to witness these rising stars in a free concert on Sunday, May 18th, at 3:00 p.m. at the Seventh-day Adventist Church in Brookings.

New report outlines drought, pests, disease, 'biggest threats' to Oregon's trees

By JEREMY C. RUARK
Country Media, Inc.

Drought, insect pests, and tree diseases continue to be the biggest threats to the Oregon's trees.

A new report on the state of health of Oregon's forests is based on an extensive aerial survey of Oregon's forests completed last year by the Oregon Department of Forestry (ODF) and the USDA Forest Service.

"A large part of this report is devoted to looking at the impact from climate change, specifically drought," ODF Forest Entomologist Christine Buhl said. "Drought is often paired with rising temperatures, and together these are often the underlying causes for tree mortality across our landscape. Drought reduces tree growth and increases susceptibility to insect pests and some diseases, which healthy trees may otherwise resist or tolerate."

Buhl said the report also measures other causes of trees being injured or killed, such as insect pests, diseases, storms, and wildfires.

Last year a record 1.9 million acres were affected by wildfire. However, some of those acres contained sections that were not damaged, not all of the burned areas were forested, and not all forests burned with the same intensity. Some areas that experienced low-intensity wildfires, in many places because of fuel-reduction work, may see a majority of their larger-diameter trees survive, according to the report.

Areas hardest hit by drought, such as the eastern foothills of the Cascades and some parts of northeastern Oregon, saw the largest amount of non-wildfire tree damage—some 2.26 million acres. Within those 2.26 million acres is a mosaic of unaffected and current-year affected acres of forest. In 2024, 580,000 affected acres of damage from these agents were recorded. Damage consisted of 496,000 affected acres of tree injury, most of which (463,000 acres) was caused by Swiss needle cast, a foliar disease from which trees may recover. But 84,000 acres showed tree deaths, the report states.

"We may be under-reporting the impact of many tree-killing diseases, because the signs can often be missed from the air," Buhl said. "For example, root diseases require ground-based assessment, such as excavating roots, to verify the presence of disease. This is labor intensive so is not done routinely across all forestlands."

Buhl emphasized the importance of on-the-ground collaborators to help round out the full picture of forest health in Oregon. "In addition to information ODF and the USDA Forest Service gather, we rely on Oregon State University Forestry Extension staff from across the state, and collaborate with other natural resource agencies, universities, public and private forest landowners, and members of the public to gather information," she said.

In the aerial survey, trained observers fly over all forested lands in the Pacific Northwest in fixed-wing aircraft and record damage to trees from all sources. Flights are staffed with one observer on each side of the aircraft. Survey flights typically fly between 1,500 to 2,500 feet above ground level, following a systematic grid four miles apart and traveling at 90 to 140 miles an hour.

The Pacific Northwest Aerial Detection Survey is the longest continuous survey of its kind in the United States, having been established in 1947 and flown every year since, except 2020 when it was halted due to the COVID-19 pandemic.

The report summary

This report is a joint product from the Oregon Department of Forestry (ODF) - Forest Health and the U.S. Forest Service (USFS) – Forest Health programs. We also rely on reports from other ODF, USFS, and Oregon State University Forestry Extension staff from across the state (Fig. 1 and back cover) and collaborate with other natural resource agencies, universities, public and private forest landowners, and members of the public to gather information.

Each year we provide information on forest health trends and highlights as identified by aerial and ground monitoring efforts (see Monitoring section). A large part of estimating forest health is measuring damage from agents that cause injury or mortality. These agents include pest insects, diseases, and abiotic stressors such as drought, storms, and wildfire. Here, we review major damage-causing agents observed in the past year and provide guidance and resources for management. Some of these agents, such as disease-causing pathogens, are underrepresented in our reporting because they are hard to observe or verify on a large scale. For example, root diseases require ground-based assessment, such as excavating roots, for verification.

This is labor-intensive and may be destructive to the tree. A large part of this report is devoted to climate change and specifically drought, which is often paired with high temperatures. These abiotic stressors are often the primary underlying causes for tree mortality across our landscape. Drought reduces tree growth and increases susceptibility to insect pests and some diseases, which healthy trees may otherwise resist or tolerate.

In 2024... Oregon experienced a historic wildfire season, and many parts of the state are experiencing ongoing drought stress. The largest forest health issue affecting much of the state continues to be drought followed by infestation from opportunistic insects such as bark beetles. New research and tools are being developed to help forest landowners improve climate resilience in their stands by providing resources on appropriate seed sources, updated stand density guides, and landowner assistance funding. The most important forest diseases in Oregon continue to be Swiss needle cast (SNC) and sudden oak death (SOD). We conducted an aerial survey and continue to see SNC impacting large sections of Douglas-fir along the coast. Collaborative disease monitoring efforts and ongoing trials to identify SNC-resistant Douglas-fir varieties are being conducted at several locations. New SOD infections continue to be identified in Curry County, and collaborative efforts of state and federal agencies continue to attempt to slow the spread of the disease. Most of the forest insect and disease pests on our landscape are native species, and most are impacting our most susceptible trees. However several invasive species are threatening specific tree species, even when they are healthy. In 2024, multi-agency task forces continued to make progress in addressing invasive species such as Mediterranean oak borer, emerald ash borer, and sudden oak death, with emphasis on identifying pests’ presence, slowing their spread, providing mitigation strategies, and increasing public outreach to aid in detection, diagnosis, and management. More recently detected exotic species include the Japanese cedar longhorned borer and Phytophthora austrocedri. In 2024, Oregon had one of the most destructive wildfire seasons in its history—1.9 million acres burned, communities were tested, and lives were changed, according to the Oregon Fire Marshal Mariana Ruiz-Temple.

"But amid the devastation, there were also stories of resilience: homes that stood strong because they had defensible space," Ruiz-Temple states in a release.

As May marks Wild-fire Awareness Month, Ruiz-Temple is urging Oregonians to act now. With the possibility of another challenging fire season ahead, preparing your home could make all the difference.

"For the last several years, we've been proactively working to boost staffing at local fire agencies, modernizing response equipment, and investing in wildfire resiliency projects across the state," Ruiz-Temple said.

"But we can't do it alone. We need every Oregonian to rise to this challenge. Creating defensible space around your home is one of the most effective ways to protect your property and your community."

Ruiz-Temple recommends Oregonians start with small

- changes that have a big impact:
- Space and prune trees to prevent fire from climbing into canopies.
  - Remove leaves, pine needles, bark mulch, and other debris within 100 feet of structures or up to your property line.
  - Clean roofs and gutters of flammable debris.
  - Move combustible materials—like mulch and firewood—away from your home.
  - Keep plants trimmed and clear of dead material, especially near the house.
  - Avoid planting directly under eaves; leave at least a five-foot buffer.

For a detailed guide on how to create defensible space, visit www.oregondefensiblespace.org.

As you clean up your yard, Ruiz-Temple said be mindful about disposal. Consider chipping, composting, or recycling. If burning is necessary, always follow local rules. Debris burns that get out of control are the leading cause of human-caused wildfires in Oregon.

This May, the Oregon State Fire Marshal—alongside fire service partners—is calling on everyone to get ready, stay aware, and believe in fire safety.

"Together, we can reduce wildfire risk and protect what matters most," Ruiz-Temple said.

State Fire Marshal

The Oregon State Fire Marshal became an independent state agency in July 2023.

The Oregon State Fire Marshal is dedicated to protecting people, property, and communities from fire and hazardous materials. The agency works in partnership with local fire agencies, communities, and other partners to strengthen fire prevention, preparedness, and response statewide. Please note: the Oregon State Fire Marshal is no longer an office.
