Snow rescue leads to better equipment

Curry County orders Sno Cat to help in future rescue attempts

BY DAVID RUPKALVIS
The Pilot

Four men may owe their lives to a group of search and rescue deputies from the Curry County Sheriff's Office.

Sheriff John Ward said the men became stranded in the mountains late in January when a winter storm dumped three to four feet of snow in the higher elevations.

That night, Jan. 26, just turned out to be the night the four men, Sean Farris, 30, Aaron Farris, 28, Shawn Miller, 29, and Bjorn Schaller, 21, decided to go up into the mountains and make a campfire to cook some food.

When they didn't return home, Shawn and BJ Farris of Brookings called the sheriff's office to report them missing. Shawn Farris explained the men went up into the mountains before the storm hit. When they had not returned by midnight, Shawn Farris attempted to go find them himself, but he got stuck in the snow and was forced to return home.

Despite the winter storm, search and rescue coordinators Deputy Walter Scherbarth and Deputy Jared Gray got to work. At 4 a.m., the two responded with a search and rescue volunteer to the area only to find the heavy snowfall made it difficult to reach.

Ward said due to the conditions, his team knew it had to react immediately.

"Situations like this, when there's extenuating circumstances, one of them was disabled, we just go out no matter what time it is," Ward said. "The circumstances dictated to us we need to get out there as soon as possible."

Using a side by side with snow tracks, the search and rescue workers continued to make their way up the mountain.

After about six hours of searching, close to 10 a.m., the search and rescue team located the pickup truck the men drove up the mountain in. It was stuck in snow on Wildhorse Road. Sean and Aaron Farris were with the vehicle, and they reported Schaller and Miller had left about an hour earlier to try to hike out.

Deputies took the Farris brothers down the mountain where they were picked up by their father. The sheriff's office ATV, which had made it up the mountain, was struggling to continue because of the deep snow, making it clear better equipment was needed to find the remaining two men.

Ward called Josephine and Jackson counties to ask about using Sno Cat machines, only to learn none were available. Ward then reached out directly to the Tucker So Cat Company in Medford, and they agreed to send over a machine to help in the search.

Gold Beach looking to expand

BY ZACK DEMARS
The Pilot

Gold Beach may be getting a little bit bigger.

At its meeting Monday, the Gold Beach City Council made another attempt to expand the city limits, reaching up Jerry's Flat Road to several city-owned lots and one privately owned lot.

The move aims to extend the city further up the Rogue River towards the edges of its urban growth boundary and connects the city's water intake infrastructure with the rest of the city.

"Since the 2016 adoption of the Water Master Plan, it had been the plan to annex the city's critical water infrastructure parcels into the city - under our jurisdiction and control once we had secured the raw water intake parcel," city staff wrote in planning documents supporting the move. "This plan was put into motion when we acquired the parcel in 2018."

The city also hopes the annexation will encourage future annexations on the road, encouraging development which benefits the city, and will allow the city to exercise more control in the area, city staff wrote.

"Local ownership and inclusion within the city limits will provide markedly improved security and the ability to protect, enhance and conserve the property's scenic and natural resources," part of the Feb. 1 council report read.

It's the city's first annexation since 2007 — but Monday's meeting was the city's second go-around to make it happen.

The first came in December, when councilors considered a similar proposal. At the time, the council approved the first reading of the annexation ordinance, the first of two such approvals it would have to make.

But that plan was interrupted by objections from Curry County, which raised concerns about the inclusion of the piece of privately owned property in the annexation plan.

Three pieces of property in the plan are owned by the city around the water intake, totaling just under 11 acres. But a fourth piece of property, over 150 acres, is privately owned and has been largely vacant since an old mill burned in 1991, according to city documents.

County staff and commissioners objected to the inclusion of that property in the plan, as well as some of the plan's technical aspects.

The county sent a letter to the city council before it considered the first ordinance, and then-chair of the board of county commissioners Chris Paasch reiterated that letter before the city council in December.

Curry County ramps up vaccine efforts

ZACK DEMARS
The Pilot

As supplies of the COVID-19 vaccine slowly become more stable, Curry County's hospital system is ramping up its vaccination effort.

As of Monday, data from the Oregon Health Authority showed just over 1,400 people in Curry County have received a COVID-19 vaccine, including just over 170 who've been fully vaccinated with the two-dose sequence.

Curry Health Network has been vaccinating health care workers and other Phase 1A populations since it received doses of the vaccine in December. But just last week, staff at the hospital took the first step of expanding vaccine access with several clinics across the county.

The clinics aren't mass vaccination events, and appointments are required for the narrow group which is eligible to receive vaccines under state guidelines — but hospital CEO Ginny Williams says staff are doing all they can to get shots into arms.

"Honestly, I think we've done a good job," Williams said. Currently, individuals in Phase 1A and educational staff are eligible to receive vaccines. Williams said the hospital reached out to a number of organizations in health care settings early in the vaccine rollout to offer vaccination appointments for staff.

"For those that want it, we're almost 100% complete with those folks," Williams said.

Teachers and other educational staff — the next group after health care workers on the Oregon vaccination schedule — are well on their way to being completely vaccinated, too, with Williams projecting they'd be complete by the end of the week.

The hospital receives shipments of vaccine each week, and the goal is to use up that quantity by week's end, maximizing efficiency with appointments scheduled online and a staff of volunteers which moves vaccine recipients from registration to post-shot observation in a matter of minutes.

So far, Williams said CHN has come close to that goal, usually with a small handful of each week's doses still in vials by the end of the week.

But a fact she's proud of? "To date, we have not wasted one dose," Williams said.

Harmony and Me: Bringing people together

BY DAVID RUPKALVIS
The Pilot

In a time of a global pandemic where it feels like people are always fighting, Tricia Bartlett-Iverson has a suggestion — turn to music.

The founder and executive director of Harmony and Me Music, Bartlett-Iverson has seen firsthand the power of music to bring people and cultures together.

"Music is the most powerful tool," she said. "It does so much for therapeutic purposes alone. There are very few people in the world who can't engage with music."

Bartlett-Iverson knows how music can impact people, and she hopes to bring that impact to more and more people. Her nonprofit Harmony and Me is based in Brookings, but she hopes to bring it and the power of music to Crescent City and many others places soon.

By any description, Bartlett-Iverson had a difficult childhood, spending most of her youth in foster homes. Music gave her a sense of direction then, and her vision of using music to bring people together first started as a 5-year-old.

"It was an experience I had in the community I was in, and I didn't like it," she said. "There were all these differences, and no one was coming together. So, I started dreaming of a way to bring us together. We're all stuck here, we might as well get along."

In 2009, while living in the San Francisco area, Bartlett-Iverson launched Harmony and Me as a way to teach young children music and provide comfort and entertainment to the elderly.

She taught music to pre-schoolers at Mission San Jose and would bring the youngsters to assisted living facilities where they would sing for the patients. The result was inspiring for both age groups.

When she moved to Brookings, Bartlett-Iverson brought her idea with her and relaunched Harmony and Me. While the pandemic has changed things, it has not stopped her dream.

"Right now, we do Zoom classes," Bartlett-Iverson said. "It's OK. We might do outside classes. I'm doing babies up to 10 years old."

With assisted living facilities locked down due to COVID, the singers have not been able to perform in person, but Bartlett-Iverson has again turned to technology to reach out to the seniors.

At Thanksgiving and Christmas, Bartlett-Iverson had her students record music. She also reached out to the community, allowing anyone to play a song, sing or just leave a message. She made DVDs and handed them out at senior facilities, trying to bring a little joy to the elderly patients mostly locked up for close to a year.

A third CD, which will be delivered for Valentine's Day is planned. Bartlett-Iverson will set up Feb. 4-6 at Fred Meyer and other locations to allow people to leave a message for the seniors.

"Music is so powerful," she said. "It touches our souls. A little bit of music goes a long way."

And music alone can do so much for people, Bartlett-Iverson said.

"Some of my most concrete memories are people who are totally non-responsive," she said. "A couple weeks later, their toes are tapping and a little later, they're clapping their hands. It changes the dynamic of the environment. Our hope is to expand programs and to also use technology."

With classes now on Zoom, Bartlett-Iverson said she can have grandparents in one location sign up for classes with their grandchildren in another. They can get together weekly and sing and make their own music.

"We have ways to connect families like never before," she said.

While there are fees associated with the classes, Bartlett-Iverson said scholarships are available for families in need. She currently teaches music classes for newborns to 10 years old. She is also working to enlist teens to work with seniors on technology. She has plans to distribute iPads to assisted living facilities and hopes the teens can lead distance classes to teach the seniors how to use them.

The iPads can then be used to visit with family, send messages and even do important things like sign up for the COVID vaccine.

While her work today is in Brookings, Bartlett-Iverson is working on a model that can easily be transferred anywhere in the nation. With a trained teacher, Harmony and Me can be used to touch lives anywhere, she said.

While Bartlett-Iverson has been working with her nonprofit for more than a decade, it is a labor of love. She does not get paid and maintains a full-time job to cover her expenses. A few grants have helped provide things like the iPads and music materials she loans out, but it's mostly a labor of love.

"This just passion work, this is totally passion work," she said. "It's a calling. I can't not do it. I want it to explode."

her life. Over the years at Sandy's Country Kitchen, all the girls that worked for her were her family too, even when she was on the warpath.

She volunteered in so many activities in the community: The Chamber of Commerce, Rotary Club, Azalea Festival, Chetco Museum and so many other activities it's hard to count. Helping at the Chetco Museum was part of her pastime because of her knowledge of the area and the people who were here before her. She always wanted to give back to her community as much as she could.

After retiring, she enjoyed travelling with her best friend Shelia. Golfing with the Ladies Club at Salmon Run was probably her greatest enjoyment. She so much wanted to play one more round with her friends. She was so grateful for all the cards she received over the holidays. She wanted to thank everyone for them.

Sandy is survived by her brother Larry (Diane) Way of Burlington, Washington; brother Gary Way of Baker City, Oregon; daughter Nicola Hedberg of Brookings, son Kevin Hedberg of Astoria, OR; four grandchildren and three great-grandkids.

To everyone that knew her, we have all lost a piece of our hearts, but the memories will always be with us. You will be missed by so many people. It would take a special edition of the paper to tell everything she has done.

Look out Heaven, here she comes!

Deputies rescue man, dog

BY DAVID RUPKALVIS
The Pilot

A Grants Pass man who became stranded when heavy rains caused the water level to rise near Miller Bar is safe and warm thanks to the Curry County Sheriff's Office Search and Rescue Team.

Kristopher Bural drove out to Miller Bar with his 15-year-old dog Pearl on Sunday but realized Monday morning the rising water was not going to allow them to leave.

At 9:37 a.m., Bural call 911 and told the dispatcher they were stranded in the water and needed help getting out. Deputies and a state trooper responded to the area and were not able to find Bural or his vehicle.

With the Chetco River rising due to the rains, responding deputies could not reach Miller Bar.

Two hours after the 911 call, deputies spotted Bural's vehicle about a half mile below the entrance to Miller Bar. At around the same time, Bural called 911 a second time to report he was not able to climb up the bank any further with his dog.

A deputy and the state trooper made their way through the water and reached Bural. At the time, he said he had come to area around noon Sunday and was cold and lethargic but mostly healthy.

The two law enforcement officers at the scene determined the only way to get Bural and his dog away from the rushing water was by boat.

Search and rescue member Ryan McGinnis, who is also a rescue swimmer, was called in to assist and he arrived with a small jet sled boat he built himself. McGinnis has previously used the boat on several rescue missions.

At around 2:41 p.m., McGinnis and Deputy Garrett Shannon, also a rescue swimmer, launched the boat at the base of Miller Bar Road. McGinnis and Shannon located Bural and his dog about a quarter mile away and were able to transport them back to the entrance of Miller Bar.

A deputy then gave both a ride to a Brookings hotel for the night. Bural said once the water receded, he would return for his vehicle.

Property taxes due soon

Curry County Assessor/Tax Collector Jim Kolen announced this week that statements for the second trimester property tax payments of tax year 2020-21 have been mailed. The due date for second trimester payments is Feb. 16. Property owners should ensure payments are postmarked by the due date to avoid additional interest charges. Property owners who wish to have a printed receipt should send a self-addressed stamped envelope with their payment.

Kolen would also like property owners to be aware that the "unpaid tax" amount on the second installment notice may not actually be the total amount due. The "unpaid tax" is the second trimester payment amount only. Owners wishing to make full payment of the remaining property tax amount should contact the tax collector's office. For tax payoffs and other inquiries, contact the tax collector at 541-247-3305.

Payments may be mailed to the Curry County Tax Collector, 94235 Moore Street, Suite 222, Gold Beach, Ore. 97444 or paid in person at the assessor/tax collector's office in the Curry County Courthouse Annex at the same address in Gold Beach.

Online tax payments are available by accessing the Curry County website at www.co.curry.or.us. Follow the link for Curry County Property Tax Payments. Payments are also accepted over the phone at 1-844-399-5263. There is a $2.95 fee for a Visa debit, $3 fee for using an e-check payment and a 2.5% fee for using a credit card payment. The tax office is open Monday through Friday from 9 a.m. to 5 p.m.

Curry County COVID case numbers remain low

BY DAVID RUPKALVIS
The Pilot

COVID-19 cases ticked up slightly over the last week, but COVID remains mostly under control in Curry County despite most of the economy opening up in recent weeks.

From Jan. 26 to Feb. 1, eight new COVID cases were confirmed in Curry County. The case count peaked with three new cases reported Monday.

Despite the increase, Curry County will remain in the low-risk tier in the state, which allows most businesses to open to at least 50 percent capacity.

Sherrie Ward, the county's public health administrator, reported seven of the cases were from southern Curry County, mostly in the Brookings area, with one case in the central part of the county.

The county reached out to all of the new COVID-positive cases to ensure they are isolating and taking the necessary steps to protect the community. The county is also conducting contact tracing to warn anyone who may have come into close contact with anyone who tested positive.

As of Feb. 1, Curry County has had 334 total COVID cases since the pandemic began 11 months ago. Five Curry County residents have died after testing positive.

Ward said despite the recent drop in cases, it remains important that all residents take basic steps to protect themselves from COVID. That includes washing hands regularly, wearing a mask in public and maintaining social distancing. Most importantly, if someone is showing symptoms of COVID, they need to stay at home to avoid spreading the virus.

For updated COVID-19 guidance, visit <https://gov-status.egov.com/OR-OHA-COVID-19>.

In the low-risk tier, the state allows:

- Social indoor gathering – limit goes from eight to 10 people and from two households to four.
- Eating and drinking establishments – indoor capacity at 50% but no number cap; outdoor maximum goes from 150 to 300. And closing time is now as late as midnight.
- Indoor entertainment – maximum at 50% with no number cap.
- Faith institutions – goes from 50% to 75% with no number cap.
- Outdoor recreation and entertainment – maximum goes from 150 to 300.

Rescue

Just before the machine arrived, deputies made it through the snow and were able to locate Schaller and Miller walking in the deep snow a couple of miles from their vehicle. Despite having to cut several trees, the deputies were able to transport the two men about 10 miles to a waiting ambulance. Schaller and Miller were both wet and cold and showed signs of hypothermia, but they refused medical services and went home with friends.

Ward said one good thing that came out of the rescue is he was able to use it to order a Sno Cat for Curry County. He explained Title 3 funding is available for the county, but the money can only be used to assist search and rescue efforts on federal land. Since the men were lost in federal forest, Ward ordered a Sno Cat that will be paid for by the federal government.

"It would probably turn a 10-hour day into a two-hour day," Ward said. "The machine we were using struggled quite a bit."

Ward said having the Sno Cat will save lives in Curry County and possibly elsewhere as well.

"We used to have a couple of snowmobiles, but they were the wrong kind," he explained. "We have to go off road just to find people. We'll be the only county on the coast to have one, so we can help other counties."

Ward said over the years, several people have died after being trapped in snow, especially near Bear Camp. With the Sno Cat, the search and rescue teams will be able to find people faster, which will save lives.

In the search last month, Ward said the men made a big mistake when they split up. He said the two men who left would have had to walk 15 miles in thigh-deep snow to find help, and they easily could have gotten lost. Without being found by the search and rescue team, they easily could have died on the mountain, Ward said.

Before going on trips to the mountains, Ward said tell loved ones where you are going and everyone should be prepared for an emergency.

"Make sure you're prepared, just in case things go bad," he said. "If you're lost and nobody has heard from you, we will find you. Just stay with your vehicle."

Gold Beach

After the council approved the first reading of the ordinance, Paasch discussed the county's objections with Gold Beach Mayor Tamie Kaufman the next week at a county business meeting.

He listed several concerns about the plan, including the fact it came as something of a surprise to county officials and he felt it wasn't the most efficient way to get city services to the property.

He shared other objections, too.

"First of all, it's a cherry-stem annexation," Paasch told Kaufman at the county's Dec. 16 meeting, referring to the shape of the proposed annexation, which runs in a thin "stem" up Jerry's Flat Road to a "cherry" at the bulb-shaped set of properties. "I do know a little bit about cherry-stems and how unfavorably they're looked at."

Kaufman responded by pointing out the city's last annexation, also on Jerry's Flat Road, worked the same way. The city's other option to bring the water intake property into city limits would be to bring a broader swath of the properties on the road into the city with it, Kaufman said.

"As a strong proponent of private property rights, I don't feel comfortable with that," Kaufman told commissioners about that option. "I would much rather put up with a cherry-stem, and hope in time everybody else goes and annexes like they should, as it becomes appropriate for their property."

County officials also brought up concerns about law enforcement, with Sheriff John Ward commenting that extending the city limits up the river would add that distance to the area under the purview of the city's police department.

Kaufman responded to that objection during Monday's city council meeting, saying the city's police force already frequently is the first agency to respond to emergencies on nearby land, even outside the city limits, and the addition wouldn't add considerable work.

But Paasch's main objection came down to money: If the owner of the private land included in the annexation proposal chooses to turn it into an RV park, it'll be subject to a transient lodging tax. And if it's within the boundary of an incorporated city, the city's tax applies, not the county's.

"I think probably my biggest concern is here's something that is going to be a possible moneymaker for the county. And we're going to lose that," Paasch said during the Dec. 16 meeting. "It just seems like every time we get an opportunity to do something good, something happens and we can't complete it."

Paasch went on to say he didn't see the benefit for the city or the private property owner.

Kaufman responded by saying the city had already planned to annex its own properties nearby, and thought it would be easy enough to include the private property, since the owner was interested in receiving the in-city water rate and city police and fire services.

"We thought it was no big deal if they wanted to develop under city rules, it might be more simple for them," Kaufman said. "They're actually more familiar with how we do things."

The city and the county didn't come to an agreement during the Dec. 16 meeting — but the initial annexation ordinance never returned to the city council for a second and final vote.

Instead, city councilors considered a very similar ordinance Monday, with two key differences: First, it cited a different state statute allowing the annexation. And second, it didn't include certain zoning changes the initial plan had.

This time, city leaders were confident the plan would respond to the objections the county had brought up previously.

County officials weren't represented during the ordinance's public hearing, and all five members of the city council unanimously agreed to approve the ordinance, as well as to do away with the requirement it be read and approved at a second council meeting.

Keeping an eye on government can be enlightening

One of the interesting parts of working during a global pandemic, especially in 2020 and 2021 with the technology we now have, is being able to be in more places than ever before — without ever leaving my home or my desk.

In the first two days of this week, I have covered government meetings in Crescent City, Calif., Brookings and North Bend. Over the last month, I have covered the Coos Bay City Council, North Bend City Council, Coos County commissioners, Curry County commissioners, Del Norte County supervisors and Crescent City City Council, and only twice have I gone anywhere in person, once to Curry County commissioners and once to North Bend City Council.

The ability to do so much without ever leaving my desk, or in some cases, my bedroom has given me the unique opportunity to watch how different government entities work. Those of you who rarely see government bodies in action would be surprised how different they can be from city to city and county to county.

Generally speaking, there are three kinds of local government bodies. The first is dominated by a strong hired official, either a city manager or county administrator type. Often, those meetings are rather boring as the elected body listens to a report from staff and votes how staff recommends. Often in those cities, you will see few opposed elections as the level of interest in government is pretty low.

That can be good and bad. A strong leader is wonderful if the leader is wonderful. If the leader has issues and the council puts all their faith in him or her, that can be a big problem.

In this region, none of our governments work that way. I would guess the closest is probably Coos Bay, where Rodger Craddock is a deeply respected city manager who seems to know the answer to every question. I say that as a compliment. Rodger really does appear to know it all, and his council seems to agree. But the Coos Bay council does ask a lot of questions, does debate issues and does come to conclusions on their own.

In North Bend, you can tell there is a relatively inexperienced council with a new city leader. They are learning together. But in doing so, they listen intently, ask a lot of questions and work together to come up with solutions. I actually like it.

David Rupkalvis
Executive Editor

North Bend has some big budget issues it is dealing with, so the council and staff have some challenges over the next few months. It will be interesting to see how it plays out.

I have only seen one Coos County meeting, but since there is no hired leader in the county, it is clear commissioners are in charge. And they are different. It leads to good debates and good details about the nitty-gritty of government. With no administrator and strong elected officials, Coos County put a lot of faith in three people, but so far, they seem up to the task.

That brings us to Curry County, where county officials have been in the news a lot lately. I have covered several communities similar to Curry County, and what they are going through, I commonly refer to as growing pains. Much like Coos County, Curry County has strong commissioners. They do have a top county official, but that position is not meant to be a county administrator, leaving three commissioners to oversee day-to-day operations.

And it's been a challenge. Two commissioners have differing views on what being in charge means and it shows at almost every meeting. While it is concerning at times, ultimately, it's a pretty good sign. Curry County is going through growing pains, but to get anywhere good, sometimes it requires some pain.

To the far south of our coverage area, lies Crescent City, Calif. The city council and city staff there might be my favorite to watch of any of them. The council is mostly young and relatively inexperienced, and almost every department head in the city was hired in the last four years.

But they have big plans and big goals and are shooting for the moon. I can't predict how things will turn out long-term, but the city seems to trust them based on election results last year where voters approved a tax on themselves to fund city functions.

Government from the inside is a messy beast. It moves slow, it often angers the residents, but it is vitally important. During COVID, you, too, could get an inside look. Watch on Zoom or via video. It might be surprising.

State health officials modify vaccine allocations, report 'dramatic declines' in cases

BY ZACK DEMARS
The Pilot

In a press conference Jan. 29, officials from the Oregon Health Authority and state researchers discussed the state's shifting vaccination plans, the prevalence of COVID-19 variants in the state and a significant slowing of the virus in recent weeks.

On vaccines, OHA Director Patrick Allen told reporters the state was planning to change how doses of the COVID-19 vaccine would be distributed the following week.

The move came after some counties across the state announced they'd finished with vaccinating individuals in the phase 1A population — health care workers and first responders — and were beginning to vaccinate older individuals.

The state's timeline doesn't open vaccine eligibility up to seniors until Feb. 8, so Allen said the state needed to reallocate some planned doses to areas with more health care workers and others in the first category of vaccine distribution.

"If you're a county that believes you've vaccinated all your eligible populations, we're not giving you additional doses to vaccinate your ineligible populations," Allen said.

In effect, the announcement means 18 counties will receive fewer doses Feb. 1 than were originally planned, including Clatsop, Josephine, Lincoln, Marion and Tillamook.

On the flip side, 13 counties will receive additional doses of the vaccine the same week to help push through phase 1A, including Columbia, Coos, Douglas, Jackson and the tri-county area around Portland.

The change only applies to the Feb. 1 dose allocation in an attempt to keep the level of immunity equitable across the state, Allen said. The state will also begin receiving about 10,000 more doses a week the coming weeks.

Teachers and other educational staff have begun receiving vaccinations statewide, and Allen said OHA hopes to have a "critical mass" of them vaccinated by

Feb. 14, when individuals over 75 become eligible for the vaccine under the state's plan.

"In general, we're aiming to reach approximately 70% of each eligible population before moving to the next eligible population," Allen said.

Allen also said the state's Vaccine Advisory Committee had recommended which groups should be next in line to receive the vaccine: People 16 to 64 with certain medical conditions, "frontline" workers (which has yet to be defined), adults and youth in custody and those living in low-income housing and congregate senior housing.

Under the VAC's plan, people living in multi-generational homes would follow those groups before eligibility opened to the general population.

The proposal still needs to be reviewed by OHA officials and forwarded to the governor's office for final implementation, Allen said.

A panel of scientists from Oregon Health and Science University and Oregon State University also discussed the presence of COVID-19 variants in Oregon.

Dr. Brian O'Roak, an OHSU researcher leading an effort to sequence the genome of the virus which causes COVID-19, first explained how virus variants come to be.

As the virus reproduces, it copies its genetic code to pass on — but sometimes, mistakes in that copying process can change the genetic code.

"We know now that it makes on average about one mistake copying that genome every two weeks," O'Roak said.

O'Roak and his colleagues have collected thousands of samples of the virus from across the state to analyze for variants.

The analysis can also show researchers how many different forms of the virus came into the state from elsewhere. In the first three months of the pandemic, the state saw about 20 introductions of the virus from various parts of the world, O'Roak said.

A team from OSU has also been tracking the spread of variants in the state by analyzing wastewater from 40 different sites, including OSU's campuses as well as several cities along the coast.

They've identified the presence of several global variants of the virus, including forms which some studies suggest are more transmissible and less susceptible to antibodies. The possibility they could spread is a reason for caution, said Dr. Brett Tyler, part of the OSU tracking effort.

"As these strains continue to enter our communities as our findings indicate, we reinforce the importance of all Oregonians being vigilant about protecting themselves, their families, and those around them by wearing at least one correctly fitting mask when in contact with others, limiting indoor gatherings, maintaining social distancing, washing hands regularly and, above all, getting vaccinated when their time comes," Tyler said.

Still, the conference came on the heels of significant improvements in the state's key health metrics.

"In the past two weeks, we've seen dramatic declines in daily cases, as well as our hospitalizations," said Dr. Dean Sidelinger, state epidemiologist. "We are returning to daily case numbers last seen in early November, before our winter surge."

The period between Jan. 13 and 26 saw a 45% drop in average daily cases, and Oregon is ranking among the lowest in COVID-19 cases and deaths, Sidelinger said.

He attributed the decreases to Oregon residents following pandemic precautions, adding that numbers could quickly surge again if the state lets its guard down.

"Back in early December we were worried, legitimately, that unabated the virus would overtake us, swarming our hospitals and medical facilities with new infected patients," Sidelinger said. "It's a tribute to every Oregonian that we were able to avoid that fate, and by continuing to heed the personal protective measures, we have succeeded in tamping down the virus."

Oregon's extended unemployment benefits are about to come to an end

The U.S. Department of Labor informed the Oregon Employment Department that it is turning off Oregon's Extended Benefits program because of Oregon's declining unemployment rate. With this federal decision, up to 13 weeks of EB no longer will be available after Feb. 20.

"Extended benefits has been an important safety net that has helped many Oregonians make ends meet. Fortunately, the Continued Assistance Act is providing another safety net, and EB claimants will be able to move to the Pandemic Emergency Unemployment Compensation program for an additional 11 weeks," said David Gerstenfeld, acting director of the Oregon Employment Department.

Extended Benefits is a program that extends regular Unemployment Insurance benefits when a state is at high unemployment. The average unemployment rate is reviewed at the federal level over a three-month period to determine if the state goes into this extension. If the average unemployment rate is below 8% but at or above 6.5%, then up to 13 weeks of additional benefits are available under EB.

The ending of EB will not happen immediately. Claimants can continue receiving EB benefits for three weeks and should continue filing EB claims through Feb. 20. After this date, the Employment Department will move claimants to PEUC so claimants will not need to restart their claims. This switch from EB to PEUC may require manual changes, delaying some PEUC payments. All payments will be made retroactively, and claimants will not lose out on any weeks of benefits they are eligible for.

In the event that this improvement to the unemployment rate is temporary and Oregon's unemployment rate increases to 6.5% or higher, OED will not need to meet the statutory 13-week delay period to turn EB on, per a recent authorization from Governor Kate Brown.

Commissioners right to support House Bill 2654

Curry County commissioners voted to support House Bill 2654. This bipartisan bill will benefit extending broadband access to our county. This allows our trusted Coos Curry Electric Cooperative to use existing utility easements. Extending broadband use to all rural areas is an economic development necessity.

Another positive benefit for our county would be the return of a timber severance tax. Counties historically received tax revenue from cut timber. Since the mid '90s, the county timber severance tax was continuously reduced and entirely eliminated by 2003. Since then, counties have received nothing when timber is harvested. I hope our commissioners also throw their support behind house bills attempting to renew this stream of county revenue.

BTW, the bill about lead weights is not about fish eating sinkers. Toxicity of lead is well established and discarded fishing weights in streams is a recognized problem for birds. That is why waterfowl hunters don't use lead shot. I agree with Commissioner Boice's objection to the level of punishment in the bill but there is a need to educate ourselves on the reasons behind bills before dismissing them.

Vaccines

That takes planning: CHN's vaccination clinics are currently scheduled to cycle through the network's hospitals and clinics in Port Orford, Gold Beach and Brookings Friday through Monday, with pre-scheduled appointment times for each eligible individual.

But with only a specific number of appointments, there can end up being more doses at a clinic than patients, if someone doesn't show up at their scheduled time.

Since COVID-19 vaccines expire relatively quickly once they've been taken out of freezers and mixed for administration, clinic staff have to act quickly to make sure those doses get used, not thrown away after they expire.

So CHN calls for backup: A waitlist of people in the area interested in getting a vaccine when their time comes. As clinic staff discover they have additional vaccine available at the end of a day, they reach out to those who've already signed up and offer them the impromptu doses.

Right now, that interest list is available for anyone 65 or older, and the sign-up is online at www.curryhealth-network.com.

Patients should bring their insurance cards when receiving the vaccine — the costs are covered by insurance (or by another program for those without insurance), but an insurance card is still necessary to bill the right place.

Williams said CHN is following state guidance for vaccine eligibility — meaning vaccines will be available for individuals 80 and up starting Feb. 8, with the eligibility age decreasing by five years each week after that until age 65, though CHN may have to take a slower timeline as the eligible population grows faster than available doses.

CHN is ready to keep expanding its vaccination clinics, but Williams said doses of the shots are the limiting factor in how much the network can do each week. Her staff estimates it could administer 360 doses a day at full capacity, but is only receiving about 300 a week from state health officials.

"We just haven't received enough vaccine to standup a clinic that large," Williams said.

What's more, another challenge is timing, since state officials announce on Thursdays how much vaccine they'll be shipping the very next week. That doesn't give Williams and her team too much time to plan, she said.

Still, she said CHN is making the best of the doses it gets. Williams attributes much of that to the network's staff, as well as a cadre of volunteers supporting the system. "It does take a concerted effort," Williams said. "It requires you to have additional staffing."

Janet Hoffman, the executive director of the Curry Health Foundation, manages those volunteers. "We're kind of just the ones that make sure everything flows right," Hoffman said.

Hoffman's volunteers staff the entryway of the CHN clinics, and guide people from registration to the lobby where they'll get their shots. From there, they direct patients toward the second lobby.

"The second lobby is where our lobby monitors are asking for symptoms," she said.

Volunteers are trained by the hospital on things they might encounter during the clinics, like the kinds of symptoms to watch out for after a shot is administered and how to navigate patient privacy laws.

They're also required to be flexible, Hoffman said, in case CHN receives a different number of doses than was planned for and schedules have to change, since "what's basically setting the schedule right now is when the vaccines come in."

"We do have these very dedicated volunteers and they're doing a great job," she said.

At least one other organization in Curry County is distributing vaccines, too. AllCare Health is planning a vaccination event for Feb. 6 and 7, according to organizer Cameron McVay.

That event will deliver between 200 and 250 vaccines to people with intellectual or developmental disabilities, a group identified by state health authorities as necessary to vaccinate, according to McVay.

"The state had made it a priority," McVay said. "We're happy to focus on that population."

McVay said many eligible caregivers of eligible individuals have been contacted and that, with vaccines in such high demand, AllCare's future mass vaccination plans still haven't been finalized.

For more information about eligibility for AllCare's vaccination event, contact its Brookings office at 541-471-4106.

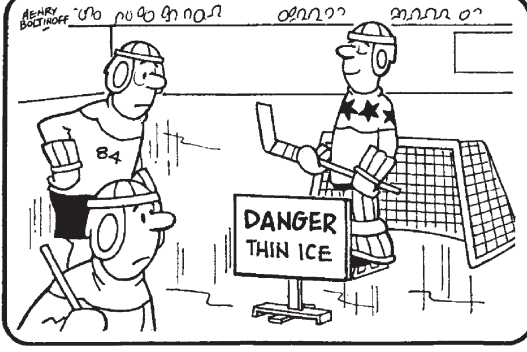

To sign up on Curry Health Network's vaccine waitlist for those over 65, go to www.curryhealthnetwork.com and see the information at right. Sign-ups can also be done by emailing to covid-vaccination@curryhealth.org or by calling 541-247-3119, though Williams warned that busy phone lines make going online the best option.

Those interested in volunteering to assist the health network's vaccination clinics can contact covidvolunteer@curryhealth.org.

WOMAN'S BOYFRIEND PREOCCUPIED WITH HER PREVIOUS RELATIONSHIP

DEAR ABBY: My sister "Darby" and I are in our 20s and confused about the relationship she is in. She's 23 and has been dating a 22-year-old man. They fight a lot because he can't stop talking about her ex-boyfriend. He says he visualizes her having sex with him, and is frustrated with himself for not being able to get the images out of his head. Is there a name for this particular problem, and how can Darby work with it? -- SUPPORTIVE SIS IN THE WEST

DEAR SIS: Yes, actually, there are two names for this "condition." They are obsession and jealousy, and both are signs of potential con-

DEAR ABBY: I moved in with my boyfriend six years ago. A year ago, his adult daughter decided she would have all her internet purchases sent to his home. Abby, these packages arrive every day, all week long. I'm tired of it. I think she's a spend-aholic.

I told him at the beginning of our relationship that I would never come between him and his daughter. But it has become a bit much. She calls him for every little thing. Now she has started asking him to help with his granddaughter's homework. I have two adult children of my own and grandchildren. Am I overreacting? I'm ready to move out and on. -- OVER IT AND OUT boyfriend of six years. His daughter seems to be unusually dependent for an adult. Is there a reason why she's doing these things? Could she be fearful that the packages she's ordering could be stolen from her porch? Does her daughter need more help academically than she is able to provide? The answers to those questions could be enlightening. After you get those answers, there will be time to make a rational (rather than emotional) decision about the status of the relationship you have with her father.

DEAR ABBY: I moved in with my boyfriend six years ago. A year ago, his adult daughter decided she would have all her internet purchases sent to his home. Abby, these packages arrive every day, all week long. I'm tired of it. I think she's a spend-aholic.

DEAR ABBY: I am a 52-year-old single, straight male. For some reason, only men seem to be attracted to me. If I sit at a table in a restaurant or bar, a man will come over and sit next to me. If I go to the park, a man will sit next to me on the bench.

Walking down the street, random men approach me. It's terrible. I'm straight! Please help! -- UNIQUE PROBLEM IN CALIFORNIA

DEAR UNIQUE PROBLEM: Because you're not meeting women, try to put yourself in situations where you will meet them. Because you are consistently approached by men and you're not interested, consider asking them if they have a female relative who's single. And when you encounter a woman you think you can click with, speak up and introduce yourself.

999 Public Notices

HINTZ aka LONNIE E. HINTZ aka LAWRENCE EUGENE CLAGGETT aka LONNIE E. CLAGGETT.

A Petition for Probate has been filed by Suzan Hintz in the Superior Court of California, County of Del Norte. The Petition for Probate requests that Suzan Hintz be appointed as personal representative to administer the estate of the decedent. The petition requests authority to administer the estate under the Independent Administration of Estate Act. (This authority will allow the personal representative to take many actions without obtaining court approval. Before taking certain very important actions, however, the personal representative will be required to give notice to interested persons unless they have waived notice or consented to the proposed action.) The independent administration authority will be granted unless an interested person files an objection to the petition and show good cause why the court should not grant the authority.

A hearing on the petition will be held in this court as follows:

Friday, February 26, 2021 at 10:00 a.m. in Dept. Two
Address of the Court: 450 H Street, Crescent City, CA 95531

If you object to the granting of the petition, you should appear at the hearing and state your objections or file written objections with the court before the hearing. Your appearance may be in person or by your attorney.

If you are a creditor or a contingent creditor of the decedent, you must file your claim with the court and mail a copy to the personal representative appointed by the court within the later of either (1) four months from the date of first issuance of letters to a general personal representative, as defined in section 58(b) of the California Probate Code, or (2) 60 days from the date of mailing or personal delivery to you of a notice under section 9052 of the California Probate Code. Other California statutes and legal authority may affect your rights as a creditor. You may want to consult with an attorney knowledgeable in California law.

You may examine the file kept by the court. If you are a person interested in the estate, you may file with the court a Request for Special Notice (form DE-154) of the filing of an inventory and appraisal of estate assets or of any petition or account as provided in Probate Code section 1250. A Request for Special Notice form is available from the court clerk.

Other California statutes and legal authority may affect your rights as a creditor. You may want to consult with an attorney knowledgeable in California law.
