

ALL-COUNTY GIRLS SWIMMING & DIVING

Swimmer of the Year MIKAYLA GREEN

OAKDALE JUNIOR

■ For the second year in a row, Green was involved in setting two records at the Frederick County meet. She was a huge contributor for a deep Bears team that captured the girls team crown that day.

■ She was involved in three wins at the county meet. She won the 200 freestyle by breaking her own county record with a time of 1 minute, 53.29 seconds. She successfully defended her county title in the 50 freestyle and swam on a 400 freestyle relay team that broke its own county mark with a time of 3 minutes, 34.37 seconds.

Diver of the Year NATALIE LERTORA

WALKERSVILLE SENIOR

■ Capped her high school career with her first Frederick County meet title, and it came with plenty of drama. The crown came down to the final dive, and Lertora didn't know she won until the top eight finishers were named after the conclusion of the meet. She beat second-place Haryn Seol of Urbana 190.80-184.80, the signature achievement of a season full of strong results.

Which NFL teams could look to make trades in draft's first round?

By ROB MAADDI
AP Pro Football Writer

could be active on Thursday night:

Philadelphia Eagles

General manager Howie Roseman is one of the most active and aggressive executives in the NFL. The Eagles own the 23rd pick. They moved up from No. 10 to No. 9 in 2023 to get defensive tackle Jalen Carter. A year earlier, they went from 15 to 13 to get defensive tackle Jordan Davis. In 2021, Philadelphia moved up from 12 to 10 to select wideout DeVonta Smith. Roseman also moved up in 2019 and 2016. He traded out of the first round in 2018.

"I think we go into this draft being very comfortable with having 23 guys we're ready to take. We're there ready and prepared for that," Roseman said. "If something happens where somebody who's higher on our board than 23rd is available, we'll be ready for that. If there's an opportunity that we think makes sense to move up based on the value of that player, we'll move up. If we have multiple guys at our spot and there's a trade that makes sense to move back, we'll move back."

The trade involving the Eagles that's been a hot topic throughout the offseason isn't expected to happen this week. A.J. Brown is likely on the move, with the Patriots expected to be the leading contender to land the star wide receiver, reuniting him with coach Mike Vrabel. The Rams already pursued Brown earlier in the offseason. The Eagles would be able to spread a $40 million salary cap hit over two seasons by waiting until June 1 to deal Brown.

Eagles wide receiver A.J. Brown is rumored to be on the trade block, and a move could happen during this week's NFL draft.

Tampa Bay Buccaneers

With the 15th pick in the first round, the Buccaneers might miss out on one of the top players on their board. They need an elite rusher and could use more draft capital because they have only one pick in each round. There are several potential pass rushers who could be a fit in the 16-25 range that would allow Tampa Bay to move back and add more premium draft picks.

"In a lot of scenarios that we're working through, yeah," GM Jason Licht said about moving back. "You have a group of players that you say, 'No matter what, if this player's there, we're taking [them]'. If there's a group of three, then maybe you go back one or two to make sure that you ensure you get one of your three, but the part of that that makes it difficult is you've got to find a trade partner. It's not as easy as it sounds. Sometimes teams just don't want to move up. They don't want to give up picks, and I understand why."

Dallas Cowboys

The Cowboys have the 12th and 20th picks, and Jerry Jones has hinted at being aggressive. But it would make more sense for Dallas to trade down in one of those spots to add extra picks because the defense has several needs.

The Cowboys don't have a second-round pick after sending it to the Jets in a deal for defensive tackle Quinnen Williams before the trade deadline. Moving down from 20 and adding a second-rounder plus other picks is one scenario.

New York Jets

The Jets have four of the top 44 picks in the draft, including Nos. 2 and 16 in the first round. They have three 2027 first-round picks.

If there's a player they covet — perhaps an elite wideout — they have the draft assets to jump up from 16. They have their choice of edge rushers at No. 2 after quarterback Fernando Mendoza goes first to the Raiders.

Miami Dolphins

The Dolphins have the 11th and 30th picks in the first round and plenty of needs. They're in full rebuild mode. Trading one of those to add more picks could help Miami replenish its roster.
