Justice says ‘live our lives’ amid virus concerns

By TAYLOR STUCK
The Herald-Dispatch
HUNTINGTON — Due to the realities surrounding the international student recruitment market, Marshall University and INTO University Partnerships have agreed to end their 30-year operating agreement.

Since that year, more than 2,000 international students were recruited through the INTO program at Marshall University. However, both parties are committed to maintaining the students being supported through the program. The international student market has been in a slow decline since 2018 due to international travelers coming to the United States falling off the increase.

Because of this and the impact on the university, the decision was made between INTO and Marshall to end their agreement.

Tonight’s meeting was to make “absolutely certain that we’re ready. God forbid, if we do, that’s an eventual thing here in West Virginia, what our future is. We’re going to just always have a surprise. There’s a situation worldwide. We want to be diligent with what we do,” Crouch said that the virus will arrive in West Virginia is low, especially because of the very small number of international travelers coming to the state, but he predicts most states will see such cases “the way it’s moving.”

Justice said residents should not cancel travel plans. “That’s unnecessary,” he said. “We have to live our lives. We’ve got all the paperwork first, so try to get to the very best of all of our abilities.”

The Cabell-Huntington Health Department on Wednesday hosted a meeting of key members of the community, locally officials, about the update and meeting around the virus. Elizabeth Adkins, public information officer for the health department, said it’s still technically winter, mild or no snow accumulation is expected.

At Dot Hicks Field in Huntington, where Marshall played a softball doubleheader against Akron on Wednesday, light jackets or sweatshirts will be enough to keep the crowd warm as they cheered the Herd on to victory. Similar conditions will be seen Thursday, when the National Weather Service in Charleston is calling for highs in the mid-30s, although light winds are expected.

司法長官 in Huntington — Although it’s still technically winter, mild or no snow accumulation is expected.

Friday, with scattered snow showers expected and highs in the upper 30s, although light winds are expected.

Similar conditions will be seen Thursday, when the National Weather Service in Charleston is calling for highs in the mid-30s, although light winds are expected.

Friday, with scattered snow showers expected and highs in the upper 30s, although light winds are expected.

Snowy skies will return to the region for the weekend as temperatures inch back into the 50s by Sunday.

The first day of spring is March 20.

THE HERALD-DISPATCH

Huntington, West Virginia
www.herald-dispatch.com

Justice says ‘live our lives’ amid virus concerns

By TAYLOR STUCK
The Herald-Dispatch
HUNTINGTON — Due to the realities surrounding the international student recruitment market, Marshall University and INTO University Partnerships have agreed to end their 30-year operating agreement.

Since that year, more than 2,000 international students were recruited through the INTO program at Marshall University. However, both parties are committed to maintaining the students being supported through the program. The international student market has been in a slow decline since 2018 due to international travelers coming to the United States falling off the increase.

Because of this and the impact on the university, the decision was made between INTO and Marshall to end their agreement.

Tonight’s meeting was to make “absolutely certain that we’re ready. God forbid, if we do, that’s an eventual thing here in West Virginia, what our future is. We’re going to just always have a surprise. There’s a situation worldwide. We want to be diligent with what we do,” Crouch said that the virus will arrive in West Virginia is low, especially because of the very small number of international travelers coming to the state, but he predicts most states will see such cases “the way it’s moving.”

Justice said residents should not cancel travel plans. “That’s unnecessary,” he said. “We have to live our lives. We’ve got all the paperwork first, so try to get to the very best of all of our abilities.”

The Cabell-Huntington Health Department on Wednesday hosted a meeting of key members of the community, locally officials, about the update and meeting around the virus. Elizabeth Adkins, public information officer for the health department, said it’s still technically winter, mild or no snow accumulation is expected.

At Dot Hicks Field in Huntington, where Marshall played a softball doubleheader against Akron on Wednesday, light jackets or sweatshirts will be enough to keep the crowd warm as they cheered the Herd on to victory. Similar conditions will be seen Thursday, when the National Weather Service in Charleston is calling for highs in the mid-30s, although light winds are expected.

Friday, with scattered snow showers expected and highs in the upper 30s, although light winds are expected.

Snowy skies will return to the region for the weekend as temperatures inch back into the 50s by Sunday.

The first day of spring is March 20.