4-H'ers ride at state horse show

JOURNAL STAFF REPORT

Three youth representing Koochiching County 4-H participated in the 2013 Minnesota 4-H State Horse Show held Sept. 13-16.

Kayla Cassibo was the grand entry rider for Koochiching County 4-H and competed in the western pleasure class. She is a member of the State Top Stars 4-H Club. Jana Hendrickson competed in games class and is a member of the State Top Stars 4-H Club. Alexis Promersberger competed in games class and is a member of the Littlefork Lumberjacks 4-H Club.

Koochiching County 4-H top place finishers included ed Cassibo, who finished in ninth place in western showmanship — pleasure type — grade 11 class.

In addition, Promersberger placed, in the games class, second in barrels — grade 6 class; third in jumping figure 8 — grade 6 class; and fourth in poles — grade six class.

Complete results of the 2013 Minnesota 4-H Horse can be found at www.4-H.umn.edu/projects/animal-science/horse. For more information on Koochiching County 4-H, contact Stacy Hall, Program Coordinator, at the Koochiching County Extension Office at 285-0962 or e-mail smhall@umn.edu.

October features full hunter's moon

BY DEANE MORRISON
University of Minnesota

This year October's most spectacular show will probably be an old friend: the full hunter's moon.

When that moon rises on the 18th, it will be about as round as a rising moon ever gets. In the Twin Cities, for example, moonrise occurs at 6:12 p.m., just 26 minutes before the instant of fullness. As it rises, the moon passes through Earth's light outer shadow, or penumbra, but this eclipse will be, at best, barely noticeable.

The morning sky gives early birds a clear view of Jupiter and Mars in the east. Jupiter, a bright yellowish beacon, floats along in Gemini, ornamenting the knot of bright winter constellations on their journey from the morning to the evening sky.

Mars, lower and dimmer than Jupiter, begins the month just west of the Sickles stars that outline the head of Leo. The Red Planet glides past bright Regulus, at the base of the Sickles, and ends October below—in this case, west of—Leo's belly. Try going out about an hour before sunrise between the 14th and 16th, when Mars and Regulus will be closest, or on the 29th or 30th, when a crescent moon visits the pair.

In the evening sky, Venus holds steady above the southwestern horizon while Saturn, in the west-southwest, heads toward the sun's afterglow. Look on the 7th to see a waxing crescent moon between the two planets.

When night falls, the autumn constellations come out.

High in the south sails the Great Square of Pegasus, the mythical winged horse. Use binoculars to find a faint oval smudge halfway between the Square's northeast corner and W-shaped Cassiopeia; this is the Andromeda galaxy, the closest large neighbor to our Milky Way.

Lower in the sky, look for several "water" constellations.

Right below the Great Square, the Circlet of Pisces is fun to find. Southwest of the Circlet, the Y-shaped Water Jar is the focal point of Aquarius. Known as the water bearer, he is Ganymede, a handsome youth whom Zeus (Jupiter) made cupbearer to the gods. Appropriately, Ganymede is also one of Jupiter's four Galilean moons.

Southwest of Aquarius is chevron-shaped Capricornus, the sea goat. And the lone star far to the south is Fomalhaut, brightest in Piscis Austrinus, the southern fish.

The astronomy world has eagerly awaited the arrival of Comet ISON, which is now bearing down on the inner solar system in what appears to be its maiden—and only—voyage to our neighborhood. But it probably won't be the spectacle it was once hoped to be.

ISON is speeding in from the farthest reach of the solar system, a home for comets called the Oort Cloud. On the 1st it sails above Mars in the eastern predawn sky, an event that will, if we're lucky, be imaged by the Mars rover Curiosity. As it hurtles down toward the sun—still in the morning sky—it'll brighten, but it'll also be harder to see. Only time will tell if ISON goes down in history as a dazzler or a disappointment. An animation of its orbit is on the NASA website http://stereo-ssc.nascom.nasa.gov/comet_ison/.

There will be no moon lighting the way for trick-or-treaters this year as they re-enact rituals begun by ancient Celts to mark the start of the dark half of the year at sundown October 31. At that moment a gap opened between the living world and the netherworld, and evil spirits cooped up for six months rushed out to bedevil humankind until sunrise May 1. All mortals could do was try to ward them off with lanterns carved from gourds or with bribes of food. Back then, evil spirits were held responsible for all kinds of sickness, death and other misfortunes of winter—a little more serious risk than having your windows soaped.

The University of Minnesota offers public viewings of the night sky at its Duluth and Twin Cities campuses. For more information and viewing schedules, see:
