What’s the difference between an SUV and a crossover?

The terms SUV and crossover are often used interchangeably. However, each of these vehicles has distinct features, and what’s more, SUVs and crossovers are built differently.

SUV

Just like trucks, SUVs have frame-mounted bodies. This means the body, driveshaft and chassis are all attached separately. SUV engines are also larger and more powerful than those found in crossovers. This makes them heavier and less spacious but allows them to tow heavier loads. Since most SUVs come with four-wheel drive, they make great off-road vehicles. However, one of the biggest downsides is that they aren’t very fuel-efficient.

Crossover

Unlike SUVs, crossovers have a unibody design. This means the body and chassis are one piece, making the vehicle lighter and more spacious. Crossovers generally come with all-wheel drive but offer the handling and manoeuvrability of a standard passenger car. In addition, they’re more fuel-efficient than SUVs but have a limited towing capacity. Overall, crossovers offer a good balance between fuel-efficiency and power.

In short, if you’re looking for a powerful and sturdy vehicle that can handle rugged terrain, an SUV is the perfect choice. However, crossovers are great for families because they’re a bit more comfortable and offer additional storage space.
