4 things to assess when buying a used car

Used cars are more affordable than new ones, but you still need to do your due diligence as a buyer. Here are four things to assess if you're purchasing a second hand car.

1. HOW IT LOOKS
Do a thorough inspection. Evaluate the wear on the tires, check the fluid levels and keep an eye out for rust, dents and scratches. The costs of new tires, fluid changes, repairs and so on should be deducted from the asking price. Inspect the condition of the inside of the car too, from the upholstery to the multimedia system.

2. HOW IT RUNS
Check the dash lights. All of them should come on when you turn the key to the on/run position and turn off when you start the engine. During the test drive, listen closely for noises that may indicate problems, such as a rumbling, rattling or whining in the engine.

3. HOW IT FEELS
Does the car handle well and does the steering feel easy and natural? Is the interior comfortable and are the controls user-friendly? Ensure that you feel comfortable with the way the car feels and drives. Also, make certain that the brakes are responsive without being too touchy.

4. WHAT YOU'VE HEARD
Research any car that you're considering buying. Find out what past owners say about the model and determine whether or not it commonly has parts that fail, premature rusting or safety defects.

Finally, before purchasing any vehicle, be sure to get it inspected by a trusted mechanic and to ask the owner for all maintenance records. Taking these steps will guarantee that you get a vehicle that's as reliable as it seems.

Top 5 driver-assistance technologies

Driver-assistance technologies contribute to your safety on the road. Here are five handy features available in many newer cars.

1. TRACTION CONTROL
This technology is designed to prevent loss of traction when the car is accelerating. It senses when one wheel is spinning faster than the others and automatically engages the brake on that wheel. This is a useful feature to have in winter driving conditions, when a loss of traction can cause the car to slide.

2. BLIND SPOT DETECTION
This feature uses sensors to monitor the sides and rear of the car and alert the driver when another car enters into their blind spot. Most systems warn the driver of the potential hazard with a flashing light mounted on the side-view mirrors or rear-view mirror. However, some systems use audio alerts or cause the steering wheel or driver's seat to lightly vibrate.

3. AUTOMATIC EMERGENCY BRAKING
This technology detects upcoming obstacles and automatically reduces the car's speed or brings it to a stop when there's a risk of collision. The sensors are able to detect slowed and stopped traffic and, in more advanced systems, pedestrians, cyclists and large animals.

4. LANE DEPARTURE WARNING
These systems detect the lines on the road and warn drivers anytime they move out of their lane without using the turn signal. Some systems use flashing lights on the dashboard to alert the driver, while others use a vibrating steering wheel or driver's seat.

5. BACKING AIDS
These systems detect objects in the car's path when it's reversing and alert the driver using a warning light or warning sound. Some newer cars also have a backup camera, which gives the driver a clearer view of obstacles behind the car.

Some additional driver-assistance technologies worth asking your local car dealer about are adaptive cruise control, driver monitoring and adaptive lighting.

5 things you didn't know car insurance covers

Your car insurance policy is probably more extensive than you realize. Here are five things you're likely covered for if you have good collision, liability and comprehensive coverage.

1. CAR SEATS
Child car seats can be pricey. However, if you have comprehensive car insurance, you don't need to worry about springing for a new one if yours becomes damaged in an accident. Insurers treat car seats as part of your vehicle and cover the replacement cost if necessary.

2. POTHOLE DAMAGE
Hitting a deep pothole can do a number on your car, whether it's bent rims, a scratched undercarriage or broken mechanical components. This damage is covered under the collision portion of your car insurance. However, bear in mind that filing a claim may raise your rates.

3. LEGAL REPRESENTATION
Most car insurance policies will cover the costs of hiring a lawyer in the event that you're sued following a car accident. Lawsuits are time-sensitive, so if you're served a legal notice, don't wait to inform your insurer.

4. HOTEL ACCOMMODATIONS
If an out-of-town accident throws a wrench into your travel plans, certain comprehensive insurance policies will cover accommodation costs. The specific limits in terms of expenses and the duration of the stay will be outlined in the policy.

5. RODENT DAMAGE
You're probably aware that comprehensive insurance covers wildlife collisions. However, it also covers damage caused by rodents chewing the wiring under your hood. Believe it or not, this isn't uncommon.

Talk to your insurer if you need a breakdown of your coverage. And if want to upgrade your current policy, be sure to ask about these lesser-known protections.
