4-H youth work offers growth and development opportunities

Young people between five to 19 years of age have an opportunity to see a whole new world through 4-H club work.

As the youth development phase of the Cooperative Extension Service, 4-H utilizes a variety of program methods and areas of interest. The organization strives to provide educational training through project work, leadership and citizenship programs, and activities.

The 4-H youth work is conducted by the Arkansas Cooperative Extension Service, University of Arkansas System, as a part of a national education system of the state Extension Services shared by state land-grant universities, counties and the United States Department of Agriculture.

Local programs are conducted by over 10,491 volunteer leaders in cooperation with county extension personnel from 75 county extension units throughout the state. This group services around 102,407 Arkansas 4-H youth. There are 11 active 4-H clubs in Hot Spring County with a membership of over 140 girls and boys, who are guided by more than 50 adult and teen volunteers.

The four "H"s on the 4-H emblem represent the head, heart, hands, and health. This signifies a unique characteristic of 4-H: the concern is about total development of the individual.
