Dear Members of the National Bar Association,

When the National Bar Association elected to remain in Miami, Florida for the 34th Annual Wiley Branton Symposium, the decision was not easy. Florida received countless civil rights complaints over the last year, and continues to make national headlines for policies that conflict with the mission of our association. But after consideration, our leadership believes we have a moral obligation as social engineers to go wherever the fight against injustice takes us.

Nevertheless, we also have a responsibility to exercise intentionality with how we spend our time in Miami, and who we spend our dollars with. South Florida is home to a thriving Black-owned business and restaurant scene who'd love to open their doors to our national membership, in addition to Black-led and operated community organizations who would welcome our support in the local fight for equality.

We hope you take advantage of our "Green Book" during the symposium and join the various activation projects that the NBA has lined up. With your participation, we will collectively speak truth to power in a state that arguably needs our advocacy the most.

As the nation's oldest and largest association of Black law professionals, we have faithfully answered the call of integrity and justice, and I have no doubt that we will do it again!

Sincerely,

Dominique D. Calhoun
National Bar Association, President
