

Taste perfection that keeps customers coming back

Not many restaurants can say they have customers literally flying in from another state just to have dinner at their establishment. Spiro's can.

After a career change caused a local diner to relocate to the south, he found himself craving Spiro's. Fortunately, his job with an airline allowed him to claim vacant seats on flights to St. Louis, giving him and his wife the opportunity to fly in for dinner.

According to General Manager Stacy McCullison, he's not the only customer who visits Spiro's every time they land in St. Louis. Often, they're craving specialties that are hard to find anywhere else. The veal chops, she said, are very popular. A generous 19-ounce cut, each chop is charbroiled and topped with a garlic, white wine and lemon sauce.

"We have one customer who comes in and orders veal chops every time he's in town because he can't find them where he lives in California. He eats here every night he's in town," Stacy said.

Customers also return time and again for Spiro's excellent selection of steak and seafood entrées and Mediterranean favorites, including Calf's Liver, another dish that's hard to find.

"One of the things customers appreciate about Spiro's is that their favorites taste the same every time they come in. Another is that our food continues to be well-priced," Stacy said. "Customers know they can count on our reputation for excellence, value and friendly staff members who have worked here for years. I think the longevity of our staff speaks to the quality we bring to each table. Everything we do is geared toward taking good care of our customers. I think that's why they keep coming back."
