

In-home care that feels like family

Chris and Deanna Altenbernd, owners

It can be difficult to let someone into your home and ask for help with tasks you can no longer accomplish. Deanna Altenbernd understands this more than most. Along with her husband, Chris, she owns Caring Christians Private Duty, "St. Louis' largest and least expensive No. 1-rated private duty company."

"I meet with every client, I answer every call, and I have the privilege of matching every family with their ideal caregivers," Deanna explained. With a team of 210 caregivers, she knows she can meet every family's needs. "I try to hit it out of the park the first time, every time, but sometimes we need to make an adjustment. When that happens, the response is immediate, which is another thing that sets us apart."

Deanna's passionate and professional caregivers are trained to provide services that include administering

IV antibiotics and fluids and caring for patients with wounds, Foley catheters and drains, trachs and ventilators, G-tubes, rehabilitation, dementia and hospice needs.

"We have a great reputation for handling everything and doing so in a manner consistent with the Golden Rule," Deanna said. "We are a family-owned, Christian company that is 100% committed to treating your family like ours!"

One of the things that sets Caring Christians apart from other in-home care companies is its reputation for charging the same rate for days, nights, evenings and weekends. Another is the way it cares for spouses in the home.

"We're never so focused on the needs of our client that we ignore whomever else may be in the house," Deanna said. "Our goal is to care for the whole family for as long or as short-term as they need us. We have a true love and concern for those we serve. They really do become our family."
