Public notices are a real victory for county residents

Welcome to this joint publication of the delinquent tax list by the Pine Knot News and Moose Lake Star Gazette, which comes to you courtesy of Carlton County and our two locally-based newspapers.

Although the Star Gazette and Pine Knot are not owned by the same company, we do share resources sometimes and have bid on the county's public notices and legal advertisements together for the past two years. I'd like to think that the arrangement has been a win-win-win the county, the newspapers and our residents.

Why? One: Maximum transparency Public bodies are required to publish notice of certain actions in a local newspaper. Although our bid costs the county more because it includes two papers — the only two papers that office here and pay property taxes here — the Carlton County commissioners have decided it's worth it to make sure readers across the county know what's going on. Choose just one paper and it's like deciding who's more important: the residents in northern or southern Carlton County. By choosing both, readers across the county have access to meeting notices, law changes, minutes and more.

Two: Maximum coverage Our two newspapers are delivered to far more people around the county than any others. In addition, the Pine Knot also publishes the county public notices — along with every public notice in our paper — to a statewide database (mnpublish.com) that is searchable by anyone with internet access.

So, why should you care about public notices? After all, these dry accounts of meetings and court hearings aren't always the most stimulating or entertaining reading. Yet, they contain information of vital importance.

While a newspaper story — by design — will often only focus on what the reporter deems the most important actions taken by a public body, meeting minutes give a summary of everything that transpired. Notices of upcoming meetings give residents the opportunity to attend and give input on an issue, whether it's a fee the city is going to charge for road and sewer repair, making chickens legal or unfolding plans for the future of the county jail.

People often post court notices for probate or parental rights when they can't otherwise reach people, or to reach people they may not even know exist.

Legal notices have been around since the early days of our country, and are required to be disseminated by an independent third party. Governing bodies are required to post proposed changes to code or statute, zoning changes, meeting minutes, meeting notices and more. Of course that doesn't prevent the county, city, township or school from posting legal notices to their own websites or a bulletin board, but requiring that the notice also be published in a local newspaper means it can't be hidden in a hallway, or removed from a website, or its text altered after the fact.

The beauty of printing public notices means readers can clip it out of a printed newspaper and keep them for all eternity. And historians can find the notices in the future. What might be insignificant today could be a key to unlocking mysteries later.

We encourage readers to peruse the public notices when you read the paper each week, because you never know what you might find.

And next time you see a county commissioner, thank them for choosing to share their public notices with the entire county.

Whether it's knowing that your boss didn't pay her property taxes, or that a baby was brought to a local firehall, public notices contain important local information.

It's worth the time to read them.

Jana Peterson is the editor of the Pine Knot News and often gets great story ideas from reading public notices in the newspaper.
