

Explaining the prophecies and the scriptures to all who desire to hear them. (Mosiah 27:35-36)

Like gears turning in a clock

By Rob • June 27, 2019

Yesterday was a somber day for me.

Like the gears in a clock, we march towards the total annihilation of the United States. It has clock, there are many mechanisms for sounding the chime.

The Lord, in indescribable mercy, is holding back his judgements. Those judgements are not arbitrary. They are the natural consequences of our behavior, according to laws of cause and effect that existed before this world was.

Because of these laws, he can't hold back the judgements we deserve without compounding them, like flowing waters held back by a dam.

There is no dam capable of holding back all water. Eventually, it will crack. When it fails, does it matter exactly where the crack first appeared on the dam?

So it is with the United States. The cracks are assured. The only question is which of the cracks will be the first to rupture, but in the scheme of things the answer to that question does not matter in the least.

For those with eyes to see, it is before them already. When the spirit is upon me, and I walk through normal daily life, I am filled with incomprehensible sorrow, because I see the walking dead. Even worse than that, I see the small percentage of survivors will live through the initial collapse. They will wish they had died with the others, not understanding that a worse fate awaits them after death. I used to look at these scenes and ask the Lord why these people would die, but now he has shown me their hearts, and I can't argue with him about it. They they would be forced to admit to God that his judgements are just, and that this was absolutely the only way.

I asked the Lord when it would happen. He said it won't happen until he has done everything he can to prevent it. That day is fast approaching. Our culture is reaching the point where light cannot penetrate it. The moment we cut ourselves off from him, when what is most beneficial is to end our society, he will do it. We are reaching the point where people can't overcome the wickedness of our environment without force, and that is the moment he will pull it down. It will come like a thief in the night. From one day to the next. It will be a surprise. Our so-called way of life (which is actually the

What he is about to do (and is already doing) is not about survival. It is about submission.

Subdue everything in your life to his will as far as you understand it. Do it today. Stop waiting to listen to him.

You absolutely have to trust him. Trust in him when times are good, and also when you can't see their goodness. Don't judge by what your eyes see. I have interacted with several people recently who have been faced with what they thought were sacrifices, but only because they could not see what God had prepared on the other side of their choice. He showed me what was on the other side.

fool themselves by thinking they trust God. They don't. There are many things in their lives that, if touched, would cause them to question the love of God. Is your understanding of God's character sufficiently correct and strong enough to withstand anything he could put into or remove from your life? If the answer is not a resounding yes, you are not yet prepared for what is right around the corner.

There is never a reason to doubt him. Anything he asks and anything he puts us through is exactly and precisely what is required to obtain more joy and greater happiness. Trust in him with all your heart. Doubt nothing and fear nothing.

to him if he is telling you to move. He showed me that there are some of you who are reading this who have been told to move, but you have responded in your hearts by saying it would cost too much to do so. What is your life worth? More than that, what is your soul worth? If he tells you to move and you don't, you will lose both.

Repent. With all my heart, I plead with you to repent while there is still time.

After writing this, the Lord told me to add these points:

1. Moving to places of refuge is as much (if not temporal sustenance (this was new to me!). The times ahead will require far more light and truth than the average person possesses or has the capability of acquiring themselves.

2. It is a gross error to believe that anyone will get through what is coming without loss-- excruciating loss. The fire is coming for everyone, universally, to a greater degree than we are generally presently aware (you can opt to go through it early and alone, which is wise).

You may die immediately. You may die later.

Many, many people who you know will die, including your neighbors, your friends, and your family members. This will probably include one or more of your spouse and children. These after going through many tribulations successfully. They may die slowly, they may die all at once. This will happen among the righteous and wicked alike.

The fire purges everything that isn't pure enough to go through it. Almost everyone has something that will not go through it. Some have nothing within them that will withstand the fire. Among those are they who say "if these things are true, I'd rather die now."

3. The difference between being in a place of refuge (defined as wherever it is God tells you to go) and somewhere else is not the guarantee of safety, or even the likelihood of less suffering. The difference is that those who follow God's ability to confide in him without reservation.

That is a requirement in order to have peace and even joy in the midst of greater suffering than you are probably aware exists.

4. Suffering is necessary for growth in every case where one could learn something through it, even if "all" that is learned is how much the person does not yet trust God in all things. One of the chief contradictions in the gospel is that blessings are only ever permanent in cases where the person is completely willing to let them go at any moment. Until then, everything and anything is subject to loss.
