Explaining the prophecies and the scriptures to all who desire to hear them. (Mosiah 27:35-36)

I hope you are paying attention

I have a lot to say about this topic. There is too much to say about it to write it in just a little blog post, and I have too little time and can't afford to take away time from other things I am doing. So I will just write this as briefly as I can and hope that those of you who are watching will understand. The rest can wait until I lay it out more clearly in a book.

When principles and rights are traded for expediency, realize that no matter who you are, it will hurt you, too, eventually.

The system is shifting further and further away from equity and justice. It doesn't matter if you are still in a segment that can say, "well, it's not so bad for ME." You have to add a "yet" to that statement.

The time is at hand when every honest, upright person will seek redress for the injustice and inequity in the system. The more just, honest, and upright you are, the more you will suffer.

It is incorrect to think that the persecutions now upon us will be against the religious. Most religious people are not just, honest, or upright.

Here is a tiny example: Suppose you are helping keep society alive by making the sacrifice to have kids. Suppose you go the extra mile to homeschool them. Well, they significantly reduced the tax incentives for that two years ago, making it considerable more expensive. Now grocery stores are limiting the amount of food you can purchase, irrespective of your family size. And government shutdowns + mandated sick leave are going to drastically increase the cost of food, which you will feel more than people who don't have kids to feed. All of this is exacerbated if you work hard enough and are wise enough to not qualify for food stamps.

You see how this works? You are going to see this over and over again in increasing volume.

Another example: Suppose you worked your butt off and saved every penny and took on massive risk to get to the point where your home is paid off. Guess who doesn't benefit from "you don't have to pay your mortgage anymore" legislation? You. You will be punished for having done the right thing. Who gets rewarded? The guy who bought the house he couldn't afford.

Suppose you worked extra hard and sacrificed
even more and bought a rental and paid that off.
Now your tenant, who did none of those things,
gets to live there for free.

Examples go on and on.

Some time ago, I warned you that things were going to happen to trap people. That the time to get to a place where you were more insulated from the changes that were going to happen was now. I echo that warning. It is time to think about where you are geographically, financially, culturally, lifestyle-wise, etc. and start living intentionally. The window is closing, and it will get harder and harder to make a move until it is too late.

You need to get to a place where you are less dependent on the system, where you are not reliant on things staying as they have been.

The particulars may change, but the upheaval will not reverse. It will just get worse.
