Old Home, New Life

New Hurst home owners saw beauty in saving property from development

BY COURTNEY STERN

The 1930s-era hand-carved staircase railing in the Hurst home purchased by Woodie and Debbie Tipps, new owners of the Hurst home, is seen in this Thursday, Dec. 2, 2021, photo. (Michael Cavazos/News-Journal Photo)

Woodie and Debbie Tipps, new owners of the Hurst home who plan to restore the house, on Thursday.

The family at that time lived in Judson Road and 13 acres of the iconic Hurst Home, at 1210 Judson Road in Longview.

Jameson previously said the property had been vacant for about 10 years, which could have happened if it had been purchased by a major retail store, for instance. It’s in a prime location, given its spot between Judson Road and 13 acres of history and preserving it.”

The Tipps’ couple has a love for older homes and architecture. Jameson took them on a tour of the house, which had been vacant for about 10 years, before they bought it and she fell in love. It was important to the couple to keep it from being torn down, which could have happened if it had been purchased by a major retail store, for instance. It’s in a prime location, given its spot between Judson Road and 13 acres of history.

Debbie Tipps said the couple has a love for older homes and architecture. Jameson took them on a tour of the house, which had been vacant for about 10 years, before they bought it and she fell in love. It was important to the couple to keep it from being torn down, which could have happened if it had been purchased by a major retail store, for instance. It’s in a prime location, given its spot between Judson Road and 13 acres of history and preserving it.

Debbie Tipps said the couple has a love for older homes and architecture. Jameson took them on a tour of the house, which had been vacant for about 10 years, before they bought it and she fell in love. It was important to the couple to keep it from being torn down, which could have happened if it had been purchased by a major retail store, for instance. It’s in a prime location, given its spot between Judson Road and 13 acres of history and preserving it.

The Tipps’ couple has a love for older homes and architecture. Jameson took them on a tour of the house, which had been vacant for about 10 years, before they bought it and she fell in love. It was important to the couple to keep it from being torn down, which could have happened if it had been purchased by a major retail store, for instance. It’s in a prime location, given its spot between Judson Road and 13 acres of history and preserving it.

Debbie Tipps said the couple has a love for older homes and architecture. Jameson took them on a tour of the house, which had been vacant for about 10 years, before they bought it and she fell in love. It was important to the couple to keep it from being torn down, which could have happened if it had been purchased by a major retail store, for instance. It’s in a prime location, given its spot between Judson Road and 13 acres of history and preserving it.

Debbie Tipps said the couple has a love for older homes and architecture. Jameson took them on a tour of the house, which had been vacant for about 10 years, before they bought it and she fell in love. It was important to the couple to keep it from being torn down, which could have happened if it had been purchased by a major retail store, for instance. It’s in a prime location, given its spot between Judson Road and 13 acres of history and preserving it.

Debbie Tipps said the couple has a love for older homes and architecture. Jameson took them on a tour of the house, which had been vacant for about 10 years, before they bought it and she fell in love. It was important to the couple to keep it from being torn down, which could have happened if it had been purchased by a major retail store, for instance. It’s in a prime location, given its spot between Judson Road and 13 acres of history and preserving it.

Debbie Tipps said the couple has a love for older homes and architecture. Jameson took them on a tour of the house, which had been vacant for about 10 years, before they bought it and she fell in love. It was important to the couple to keep it from being torn down, which could have happened if it had been purchased by a major retail store, for instance. It’s in a prime location, given its spot between Judson Road and 13 acres of history and preserving it.

Debbie Tipps said the couple has a love for older homes and architecture. Jameson took them on a tour of the house, which had been vacant for about 10 years, before they bought it and she fell in love. It was important to the couple to keep it from being torn down, which could have happened if it had been purchased by a major retail store, for instance. It’s in a prime location, given its spot between Judson Road and 13 acres of history and preserving it.

Debbie Tipps said the couple has a love for older homes and architecture. Jameson took them on a tour of the house, which had been vacant for about 10 years, before they bought it and she fell in love. It was important to the couple to keep it from being torn down, which could have happened if it had been purchased by a major retail store, for instance. It’s in a prime location, given its spot between Judson Road and 13 acres of history and preserving it.

Debbie Tipps said the couple has a love for older homes and architecture. Jameson took them on a tour of the house, which had been vacant for about 10 years, before they bought it and she fell in love. It was important to the couple to keep it from being torn down, which could have happened if it had been purchased by a major retail store, for instance. It’s in a prime location, given its spot between Judson Road and 13 acres of history and preserving it.

Debbie Tipps said the couple has a love for older homes and architecture. Jameson took them on a tour of the house, which had been vacant for about 10 years, before they bought it and she fell in love. It was important to the couple to keep it from being torn down, which could have happened if it had been purchased by a major retail store, for instance. It’s in a prime location, given its spot between Judson Road and 13 acres of history and preserving it.

Debbie Tipps said the couple has a love for older homes and architecture. Jameson took them on a tour of the house, which had been vacant for about 10 years, before they bought it and she fell in love. It was important to the couple to keep it from being torn down, which could have happened if it had been purchased by a major retail store, for instance. It’s in a prime location, given its spot between Judson Road and 13 acres of history and preserving it.

Debbie Tipps said the couple has a love for older homes and architecture. Jameson took them on a tour of the house, which had been vacant for about 10 years, before they bought it and she fell in love. It was important to the couple to keep it from being torn down, which could have happened if it had been purchased by a major retail store, for instance. It’s in a prime location, given its spot between Judson Road and 13 acres of history and preserving it.

Debbie Tipps said the couple has a love for older homes and architecture. Jameson took them on a tour of the house, which had been vacant for about 10 years, before they bought it and she fell in love. It was important to the couple to keep it from being torn down, which could have happened if it had been purchased by a major retail store, for instance. It’s in a prime location, given its spot between Judson Road and 13 acres of history and preserving it.

Debbie Tipps said the couple has a love for older homes and architecture. Jameson took them on a tour of the house, which had been vacant for about 10 years, before they bought it and she fell in love. It was important to the couple to keep it from being torn down, which could have happened if it had been purchased by a major retail store, for instance. It’s in a prime location, given its spot between Judson Road and 13 acres of history and preserving it.

Debbie Tipps said the couple has a love for older homes and architecture. Jameson took them on a tour of the house, which had been vacant for about 10 years, before they bought it and she fell in love. It was important to the couple to keep it from being torn down, which could have happened if it had been purchased by a major retail store, for instance. It’s in a prime location, given its spot between Judson Road and 13 acres of history and preserving it.

Debbie Tipps said the couple has a love for older homes and architecture. Jameson took them on a tour of the house, which had been vacant for about 10 years, before they bought it and she fell in love. It was important to the couple to keep it from being torn down, which could have happened if it had been purchased by a major retail store, for instance. It’s in a prime location, given its spot between Judson Road and 13 acres of history and preserving it.

Debbie Tipps said the couple has a love for older homes and architecture. Jameson took them on a tour of the house, which had been vacant for about 10 years, before they bought it and she fell in love. It was important to the couple to keep it from being torn down, which could have happened if it had been purchased by a major retail store, for instance. It’s in a prime location, given its spot between Judson Road and 13 acres of history and preserving it.

Debbie Tipps said the couple has a love for older homes and architecture. Jameson took them on a tour of the house, which had been vacant for about 10 years, before they bought it and she fell in love. It was important to the couple to keep it from being torn down, which could have happened if it had been purchased by a major retail store, for instance. It’s in a prime location, given its spot between Judson Road and 13 acres of history and preserving it.

Debbie Tipps said the couple has a love for older homes and architecture. Jameson took them on a tour of the house, which had been vacant for about 10 years, before they bought it and she fell in love. It was important to the couple to keep it from being torn down, which could have happened if it had been purchased by a major retail store, for instance. It’s in a prime location, given its spot between Judson Road and 13 acres of history and preserving it.