

Connecting the Nation from the Heartland

Signed into existence by President Abraham Lincoln, Union Pacific laid the rail that united the nation in 1869. Since then, our employees have lived and worked in this great community we call 'home,' establishing deep roots and a prominent place in the nation's history.

163 years later, we're just picking up steam.

Union Pacific and Norfolk Southern are building the nation's first coast-to-coast railroad to strengthen communities and build a stronger, more competitive America. A seamless railroad means faster service, fewer handoffs and greater supply chain options through enhanced competition.

"Union Pacific is an engine for growth in Nebraska," said U.S. Sen. Pete Ricketts. "This has the potential to create jobs, increase wages, and streamline the supply chain. This merger is a great deal for Nebraska and America."

It's also a deal the nation's largest railroad union supports.

"We are protecting jobs, protecting families, and protecting the future of the U.S. supply chain," said SMART-TD President Jeremy R. Ferguson.
