

Bacteria levels soar after rain

Bacteria levels in Charleston-area waterways are typically in the acceptable range for swimming, as they were on June 14. When the same areas were tested by Charleston Waterkeeper a week later, after a half-inch of rain, fecal bacteria levels had soared. Instead of fewer than 104 bacteria colonies per 100 milliliters of water, some areas had nearly 4,000.

