Minimum wages and loan cages, Purdue graduation debt soaring upwards

BY HALEY CHECKLEY
Special Projects Editor

At Purdue, student graduation debt is soaring and many variables could be to blame, from the minimum wage to the University's amenities.

Nationally, the minimum wage has remained stagnant since 2009, when it changed from $6.55 to $7.25 an hour. However, Indiana University took the initiative to raise its workers' wages by one dollar a year ago.

In a press release in April of last year, Indiana University president Michael McRobbie called the raise a sign of commitment to affordability.

"Indiana University depends on the hard work of many part-time and temporary employees on all our campuses, and this much-deserved pay increase is one way we can recognize their important contributions to the success of IU," said McRobbie. "Many of these employees also are students at IU, and increasing their pay is consistent with our commitment to student affordability and accessibility."

This change was estimated to have affected 8,750 individuals across IU's campuses, but Purdue President Mitch Daniels argued the trade off for raising minimum wage wasn't favorable.

"The trade-off that you have to think about is: you raise (minimum wage), you'll have fewer people working," Daniels said. "Maybe that is a good trade-off, unless you're one of the people that lost their job."

ployees working at $7.25, the federal minimum wage. Additionally, 113 non-student employees earn $7.35 an hour and, altogether, 292 individuals are making under $8 an hour. Prospects are even more glum for students, with 3,439 earning minimum wage, 104 students at $7.30 and 7,076 students under $8 an hour.

Generously assuming these individuals work full-time at 40 hours per week, if Purdue were to raise minimum wage by a dollar, it would mean adding an expense of nearly $105 million a year.

Joe Micon, executive director of the Lafayette Urban Ministry, has a long-standing contentious relationship with the national minimum wage since his time as a former Indiana representative. Speaking on behalf of the individuals and families he helps at the Ministry, an increase in the minimum wage, he said, would have significant meaning for the families attempting to pay rent, pay bills and keep food on the table.

Students are being forced into a similar situation, but instead of paying back the loans now, they are shouldering the debt, which resurfaces as a young graduate first gets out into the "real world."

The latest announcement by Wal-Mart states a raise in its employees' wages to a minimum of $10 by next February.

"They want to be fair to their employees and be fair in the marketplace," Micon said. "I think if the (average Purdue) student is needing to work part-time, and many students do, I think there is a certain convenience to do that right at home on Purdue's campus ... (but) I would suspect that if Purdue remains at $7.25 an hour, that Purdue University is probably not the first place that students who have to work part-time look for employment."

Micon believes if Daniels really does believe in making college a more affordable investment for students, it might be time to learn from the success IU has seen after their raise.

According to a conversation held between Patrick Shoulders, an IU trustee, and Micon, not only has IU experienced no subsequent job loss, but "students who are employees of the University (saw that) student loan debt went down this semester." Mark Land, IU's associate vice president, said borrowing was down as much as 11 percent last academic year, though says there is no way to determine whether the rise in wages or other student affordability measures on the part of the university were the root cause of this.

However, according to Fredrik deBoer, a Ph.D. candidate in the College of Liberal Arts, it is not the salaries of those working grounds or cleaning windows or even the professors who are driving the cost of tuition upward: it is that of administrators.

In fact, the number of Purdue administrators was almost eight times the growth rate of tenured and tenure-track faculty in 2012, according to an article by Bloomberg Businessweek. However, this was the same year Daniels took the presidency, and since this time, spending in administrative salaries has gone slightly down, but at a price. As of 2013, administrative positions were cut by 126 jobs.

"We're here to deliver a high-quality education at as low a price as possible," said J. Paul Robinson in 2012, then-chairman of the Purdue University faculty senate and current professor in the College of Veterinary Medicine. "Why is it that we can't find any money for more faculty, but there seems to be an almost unlimited budget for administrators?"

deBoer, who studies and assesses the trends in higher education, said the American university system at large is guilty of paying senior administrators exponentially more each year, effectively increasing the cost of tuition.

"If we are going to be talking about prioritizing things, instead of freezing the wages for people at the bottom, why are we still building 100 million dollar buildings on this campus?" deBoer said. "Now, President Daniels has instituted a building freeze, which is great, but projects that had already been approved have already gone through. The perfect example is the Krach Leadership Center...no one can give me a straight answer for why that building exists."

He equates the modern university experience to the equivalent of Club Med, with amenities overshadowing the core educational experience. As universities compete over potential students, a fundamental issue is arising, with institutions focusing on the flashy incentives rather than the best education you can get for your tuition dollar.

"When you are 19 and it seems like you are never going to graduate, that's one thing. But when you are 25 and you have an entry-level job where you are making $35,000 a year, and you are carrying $60,000 of loan debt, your attitude is going to change," deBoer said.

"I recognize that it is a costly maneuver to raise the minimum wage of employees here at the University. But I also recognize the human capital of the University...are what actually make the University a high quality experience. It's not the Krach Leadership Center, it's not the $90 million gym we built...it's the community of students and instructors working together."

The answer, he said, is to decide we, as a University, will not be "running the race anymore" of building infrastructure, creating organizations for every interest and of renovating the dorm experience into hotel-like amenities. Returning to the value of an education for the amount students pay for their education is the only surviving option for driving down the tuition cost.

"You can't expect a generation of young people to be able to graduate out of college and be the consumers we need to be buying houses, buying cars, taking vacations (and) stimulating the economy if they are carrying so much student loan debt," deBoer said.

"In general, I applaud efforts to make a university education more affordable. I think the overwhelming weight of the evidence would suggest that even for students who graduate with student loan debt, it's in their financial best interest to attend college, but I think pushing students out the door with debt burdens the way that (Purdue has) been is not sustainable and is immoral."

Daniels not in the top five paid employees at Purdue

BY JAKE SCHMIDT

Campus Editor

You may or may not think President Mitch Daniels' job is important to the success of the University, but the administration is willing to bet 30 percent of his salary that it is.

Daniels pulled in $538,061 in total compensation for 2014, according to the University, which doesn't even place him in the top five paid employees at Purdue.

"When we had decided on Mitch as a preferred candidate and were talking about his contract, he had two requests: to be paid less than the previous president and to have a significant portion of his pay to be at-risk. A good place to start was 30 percent," said Michael Berghoff, the vice chair of the Board of Trustees.

Daniels, who in his contract is charged with the "management and operation" of Purdue, would actually only receive a base pay of $420,000 if it weren't for his incentive pay. His contract allows for him to receive a maximum of 30 percent of his base salary toward at-risk payment, which would total $546,000.

Thomas Spurgeon, the chair of the Board of Trustees, was also on the team that determined how Daniels would be paid for his service to the University.

"All of these measures directly impact students' ability to have affordable access to Purdue and to receive a quality education once they arrive here," Spurgeon said to Purdue News in 2013. "There are only two universities of which we are aware that compensate their presidents in a similar way. It sends a powerful message to parents and Purdue supporters that Daniels is willing to tie his compensation to the success of our students and the University as a whole."

Some time has passed since Daniels' incentive pay was discussed, and in 2014, he received 88 percent of the maximum $546,000 he could have made off incentive pay for the year.

Such responsibilities include maintaining student debt below the national average, seeking improvements to four and six year graduation rates, developing programs to measure the growth of student academic knowledge and raising funds to financially support University programs.

Daniels hit many of the target metrics asked of him, such as meeting a target graduation rate of 48.5 percent, and keeping average student debt under $14,300, so he received most of his incentive pay.

Still, with his incentive pay included, Daniels wasn't near the top highest paid university presidents in the Big Ten. A few university presidents, such as Ohio State's Michael Drake making more than $1 million and Michigan State's Lou Anna Simon making more than $750,000, far outshine Daniels' pay.

And although Daniels may have earned $538,061, that doesn't come close to the salaries of the top two paid employees at Purdue, men's head basketball coach Matt Painter and football coach Darrell Hazell, earning $2.2 million and $1.9 million, respectively.

Berghoff said Daniels' pay depending so strongly on improving the University shows the value the administration places on affordability for students.

"That was part of the reason Mitch and the Board wanted part of his pay at risk, so that he had to perform. He frequently says, 'You need all A's to get full pay.' He thought it was a good model for other key staff positions to follow," said Berghoff.

France A. Córdova, who made $555,000 in her last year as president at the University, didn't follow the same style of at-risk pay. Berghoff said the use of incentive pay for Daniels' performance is effective, as the University expects to see 2015 and 2016 fundraising set a record and graduation rates continuing to improve.

"The use of incentive pay is a good way to see how we're doing," said Berghoff. "One of the key things is having a metric we can measure to make it easy to determine if he's meeting the goals."

Breakdown of the the biggest contract at Purdue University

Purdue men's basketball coach Matt Painter is the highest paid Purdue employee, with a salary of $2,109,633.50.

BY LOGAN CORDES
Sports Editor

Purdue has almost 11 million reasons to believe in its head men's basketball coach.

From February 2015 until June 30 of 2019, the end of the fiscal year, Matt Painter will have accumulated $10,739,583.35 from the University. On an annual basis, Painter is paid $2,109,633.50.

Although this may be the single-largest contract at Purdue University, Painter is only the fourth-highest paid men's basketball coach in the Big Ten Conference. Sitting at No. 1 is Michigan State's Tom Izzo at $3.49 million, followed by Indiana's Tom Crean at $3.16 million, and Ohio State's Thad Matta at $3.2 million.

Senior associate athletics director Tom Schott said Purdue's athletic department observes on-court/field performance as well as the pay of peers when evaluating what to pay coaches.

"Purdue wants to pay its coaches a fair amount based on what they've accomplished and what the market bears," Schott said.

There are a lot of things that go into the $2,109,633.50 figure. In the 2014-15 fiscal year, Painter's base salary is only $318,734, roughly 15 percent of his total earnings for the year, with a monthly payment of $26,561.17.

A large portion of Painter's contract comes in the form of bonuses. His performance bonus base is $948,963. Incentive-based, weighted bonuses are also obtainable for Painter. For instance, Painter is paid extra for fulfilling quotas set by the athletic department in terms of graduation success rate and his team's cumulative GPA. He can also earn bonus payments if his team finishes in the top three of the regular season Big Ten standings (10 percent of the performance bonus base for winning, 6 percent for second, and 3 percent for third), as well as winning the Big Ten Tournament.

Painter is also paid 2.5 percent of the performance bonus base for wins in the first two rounds of the tournament, and then 5 percent for any wins in subsequent rounds. If his team advances to the Elite Eight of the NCAA Tournament, Painter qualifies for a minimum bonus payment of 10 percent of the performance bonus base.

Incentive bonuses aside, Painter is also supplied with $1,500 each month as a stipend for a car. He is also given $25,000 a year to spend on NIKE clothing. Under Painter's discretion, "the Coach's assistant coaches and support staff may order," according to Painter's contract.
