THURSDAY MORNING. MARUH 15, 1902 History not only teaches the fallacy of the idea that military schools confir the high qualifications of generalship; but it also teache that the country which has pursued the system of promoting for merit, and not by more favoritism, has produced the greatest number of great generale. have sprong from the range, and in amounty, every case from the bosom of the community, without the advantage of military education.

The value of this catalogue is very great. The value of this catalogue is very great. It shows the importance of promotion for merit and service, and the exceeding hazard brought into conspicuous view and into them men of great natural capacity and talent for command. The fact shows that West Point has little to do with making a general; it neither confers the talent for command nor

We have never yet heard from the mid-despondent person the suggestion of any plan by which the South can be conquered, and made tributary to the North, provided the South prove true to herself, and determines never to surrender. What is the object of this war? It is simply Southern staples and Southern trade. Who supposes or restands

SPECIAL GORRESPONDENCE OF THE DISPATOR

The excitament occasioned by the great avail victory of Sainrday, has nearly sub-ided. So decisive a triumph and so imporient results, naturally caused much joyous agitation of the public mind here and perhaps in many other places. A thrill of pro-found delight will, doubtless, be felt in every part of the South on account of the very satiron steamer. The Yankess were, no doubt, taken by surprise; the officers and men on board the Federal frigates were almost bewildered with astonishment, and the terror conscioned by the death-dealing balls of the Virginia was intense. The whole affair was so sudden and violent that the consternation without the advantage of military education.

We have at considerable pains compiled a list of the most conspicuous Franch generals of modern times, with the dates of their promotions in rank. It is a remarkable fact that all of Nappfeons great marshals, with one or two exceptions, rose from the ranks, and that probably every one of them was without the advantage of a military education. There were indeed real generals before West Point undertook the manufacture of them.

Hoche—a celebrated General of the French Eevolution—soldier 1726, General 1725, poisoners who were on board, that the earnage looking for called forth many derisive remarks. They look upon her with contempt, not dreaming that she equil withstand the broadsides of the big Yankee fregates. The shots from her rifled guns, crashing through the ilmbers, and the storming jar and sanash from her prow, sending the Cumberland quickly to the bottom, roused all hands up to a vivid and terribre evidence of the tremendeus power of the great battering ram which they had derided and laughed at.

Joubers—Soldier 1789, General 1795; very distinguished; killed at the battle of Novi.

I egret to state that the Yankees succeeded in getting off the Minnesota, and towing her round to Fort Monroe. She is in a specially bad condition—her masts shivered; her hall riddled, and large timbere having been knocked from her apper and lower works. If she should be carried North for repuirs, the work of months will be required to put her in a seasorthy condition.

The villainy and treachery of the officers and men on board the Congress, in firing apponent grown our gunboats while approaching after she had raised the white fing, is deacounced in strong forms. By this perfidient conduct valuable lives were lost, and among them that of Lieut. J L. Tayloe, of Virginia, who died yesterday; Midshipman Hutter, who was killed in the action. Captain Buchanan, and Lieut. Minor, were also shot under the white fing. I am glad to state that they are both improving.

It is probable that not more than two hundred and fifty to three hundred Yankees of the Cumberland were killed and drowned—The statement that there were four hundred, is don't less an over-estimate.

Those on board the Virginia state that when she fired at the iron battery kirleson her tower revolved with great rapidity, and that when the ball strack, the sound was like the ringing of an immense gong. The Erricson has a revolving circular tower, in which there are two powerful gune worked by an engine. The machinery, gun tables, and all the apparatus for working them, are said to be remarkable and complete. The guns being elevated, the balls probably struck fle iron roof of the Virginia at nearly right angles, but the powerful timbers of our great marine battery resisted the well-directed and powerful blows of her antagonist.

It is reported that, in addition to the constending and terror on board the Gourses. mont.
