the next Congress.] At roughly the halfway mark on the long road toward final compilation of 50,000,000 or more ballots, this was the picture:

President Truman had the lead in 27 States with a total electoral vote of 267 (266 needed on the final tally to elect).

Dewey Has Lead in 17 States

Governor Dewey, trying for the second time to win the presidency for the Republicans, was ahead in 17 States (including New York, as always a post-intri), having a total of 226 electoral votes.

York as almost a certainty), having a total of 226 electoral votes. States Rights Democrats accounted for the other four States. The anti-Truman votes in those four normally Democratic States (Louisiana, Mississippi, South Carolina and Alabama) might have historic results. Should neither Truman nor Dewey get a majority of electoral votes, the choice of the President would be up to a vote of the newly elected House of Representatives--where each State would have one vote,

In such an event, the States Rights candidate, Thurmond, hoped to hold the balance of power. The States Rights movement was born of protest against Mr. Truman's civil rights program.

Democrats elected three Senators out of the 11 Senate races regarded as critical in the battle to control the Senate, and its chairmanships. The Democrats were leading, too, in the other eight,
