

Notre Dame geothermal fields

The University of Notre Dame has installed three geothermal well fields that circulate water in a piping system to a depth of about 300 feet below ground level before returning it to the surface and using it to help heat and cool campus buildings. This map shows the location, marked in red, of the three underground fields.

