inspire others as they make their decision about COVID-19 vaccination. Here, those Health Care Heroes—who have worked tirelessly caring for others throughout the pandemic—made their own decision about vaccination based on what they believe is best for themselves, their loved ones and their communities. Some of our own Health Care Heroes also have struggled with questions about the vaccines. In the end, they realized that either we trust God, or we don’t. People often ask me how I’ve come to trust God. I go by what He’s done for me. He’s never failed me, never let me down. Every act we can do for each other to prevent the spread of COVID-19 is drawing us closer to an amalgamation of people of different races, ethnicities, religions, political ideologies and cultural beliefs to a wonderful place. Despite our differences, we all have a common enemy in COVID-19 and I strongly consider vaccination because our most valuable asset is our health. I am one month out from having received my second dose. I see vaccination as a selfless act we can do for each other to prevent the spread of COVID-19. I have reservations because it had been developed so quickly. My mind was not settled when it was first offered to me, so I declined. I began researching it for myself, which caused me to alter my way of thinking. I asked my colleagues who had been vaccinated about the experience and also talked to me. I had spiritual conversations on the issue. He told me to act wisely, whereas I wasn’t quite there yet. This pandemic has brought me to the realization that we have a choice. We don’t. People often ask me how I’ve come to trust God. I go by what He’s done for me. He’s never failed me, never let me down. Every morning before work I read Psalm 91, which reminds me of my identity in Christ. I am not going my way. He will not forsake me. God, who created me, will not fail to keep his promise to be with me. I am one month out from having received my second dose. I see vaccination as a selfless act we can do for each other to prevent the spread of COVID-19. I have reservations because it had been developed so quickly. My mind was not settled when it was first offered to me, so I declined. I began researching it for myself, which caused me to alter my way of thinking. I asked my colleagues who had been vaccinated about the experience and also talked to me. I had spiritual conversations on the issue. He told me to act wisely, whereas I wasn’t quite there yet. This pandemic has brought me to the realization that we have a choice. We don’t have a simple one. For those with trepidation, I ask you to be cautious. This is a time to consider this vaccine because it is a matter of life or death. This pandemic has brought me to the realization that we have a choice. We don’t have a simple one. For those with trepidation, I ask you to be cautious. This is a time to consider this vaccine because it is a matter of life or death.