Steelers to host Bengals with plenty at stake

Pittsburgh Steelers are heading to the playoffs. It just doesn't exactly feel like it — or look like it — heading into their regular-season finale against Cincinnati on Saturday night. A three-game losing streak against the league's elite will do that. Yet rather than dwell on what's gone wrong, quarterback Russell Wilson has another suggestion: practice a little selective amnesia.

"You've got to be able to just embrace the moment and be so addicted to the moment that nothing else gets in the way of it," Wilson said. "They focus on the next practice, the next meeting. And that level of obsession, that level of focus, that level of communication, that level of response, is everything. And that's what champions do."

That's been part of the problem for the Steelers (10-6), who have let plenty get in their way during a slide that's likely cost them a shot at the AFC North title, namely uncharacteristic mental lapses by a defense that have made a proud unit dotted with stars look vulnerable.

On that front, the surging Bengals (8-8) can relate. Joe Burrow, Ja'Marr Chase and company look PITTSBURGH (AP) — The every bit as dangerous as most expected in August. Yet a horrific opening three months defensively forced Cincinnati to play catch-up in December. And for all of Burrow's brilliance, the Bengals need to beat the Steelers and then hope Denver and Miami lose on Sunday to reach the postseason.

It's why Burrow sort of shrugged when asked about the "MVP!" chants that rang out in the final minutes of a thrilling overtime win over Denver last week that kept Cincinnati's slim playoff hopes alive.

Yes, it was cool. And yes, he thinks he'll have a chance to win the league's most coveted award one day, just not this year. Why?

"Usually you've got to win your division," he said.

It's an opportunity the Bengals lost long ago. The Steelers appeared to be firmly in control of the North after consecutive wins over Cincinnati and Cleveland in early December, only to follow it up with three nationally televised pratfalls.

Now, their priority has shifted from winning the franchise's first division title since 2020 to playing like a playoff team before the postseason. The clock is ticking.

"We don't have time to run part of." from adversity, we have time to run through it," Wilson said. "We've got to climb the wall. We've got to go run through it. There's no magic pill for getting around it."

Chase-ing records

Burrow heads into the finale playing perhaps the best football of his five-year career. His streak of eight straight games with at least 250 yards passing and three touchdowns is an NFL record. He also leads the league in completions (423), yards passing (4,641) and touchdown passes (42).

While Burrow believes reaching 5.000 yards "would be cool," he's more intent on taking in Chase's burgeoning greatness. The fourthyear pro is vying for the receiving triple crown. Chase leads the league in catches, yards and touchdowns. The last player to do it was Cooper Kupp of the Los Angeles Rams in

"He grinds for it," Burrow said of his college teammate at LSU. "He's a once-in-a-lifetime type player and our careers will forever be tied together from college into the pro landscape. That's just fun to be a

The Steelers are allowing more than 400 yards per game during their losing streak, and their frustration

Communication breakdown

has bubbled over into public view. Safety DeShon Elliott blamed the unit for making the kind of alignment mistakes that might be understandable in September, but not December. Outside linebacker Alex Highsmith questioned whether some of his teammates have the "want-to" required to make a deep playoff run.

Pro Bowl safety Minkah Fitzpatrick believes the angst is a natural byproduct of having a room full of competitors. So does defensive coordinator Teryl Austin, who prefers his unit getting angry.

"That tells me that they want to get it right, and they're not satisfied with it going the way it is," Austin said. "We have good men in our building. They've been through a lot of stuff together, and rightfully so, a little bit frustrated, but out of that frustration, I think we can find some prosperity."

Late-season surge

Cincinnati's 30-24 overtime yards for Harris.

win over Denver was significant, considering that seven of its eight losses this season have come by one score. Before December, the Bengals were proficient at blowing leads late. The Bengals also won their fourth straight game for the first time this season. And for the first time they beat a team with a winning record. Their previous seven victories came against sub-.500 teams.

Last stand?

The finale could be the final game at Acrisure Stadium for Steelers running back Najee Harris. The club declined Harris' fifthyear option last spring, meaning the only player in franchise history to top 1,000 yards rushing in his first four seasons with the team could be elsewhere when the 2025 season kicks off.

The rise of Jaylen Warren may have played a role in the decision, and while Harris has had another productive fall, Warren has been the more effective option of late. Warren has 33 touches for 202 yards over the last two games, compared to 24 touches for 123

Notre Dame, Penn State to renew long-dormant rivalry

Notre Dame and No. 5 Penn State are coming off rather divergent College Football Playoff quarterfinal experiences as they prepare to clash as semifinalists in the Orange Bowl next Thursday.

The Fighting Irish (13-1, CFP No. 7) mustered an opportunistic victory over SEC champion Georgia after an unprecedented delay and under emotionally trying circumstances stemming from a deadly terror attack in the Sugar Bowl's host city.

The Nittany Lions (13-2, CFP No. 6) overwhelmed a non-power conference team that looked overmatched in the Fiesta Bowl, during which social media was alight with football fans — and some analysts questioning a CFP committee seeding process that had given eighth-ranked Boise State a No. 3 seed and a bye.

Notre Dame's Marcus Freeman isn't buying the notion that a team's performance in an upcoming game can be predicted by the path it took to get there.

In the case of the Sugar Bowl, Georgia earned a bye by winning the SEC title game against Texas, which is still playing in the semifinals at the Cotton Bowl against

NEW ORLEANS (AP) — No. 3 Ohio State. Notre Dame did not get as much rest. They had to play in the first round and looked sharp coming off a convincing victory over Indiana.

> "Whatever circumstances you're given, you make the most of them," Freeman said. "And if we would have had a first-round bye, I would have been the first one to say, 'Hey, this is great for us.'

> "I don't believe in my heart that the first game (against Indiana) had anything to do with this one (in the Sugar Bowl)," he added. "It was about the preparation they did after the first game."

Similar styles

Notre Dame is listed as a 1.5-point favorite, according to Bet-MGM Sportsbook. Neither offense airs it out on regular basis. Their yards-passing averages are outside the top 50 nationally. But both teams have rushed for more than 200 yards per game this season, and both have played some of the best defense in the country, each allowing fewer than 16 points per game.

Penn State ranks fifth nationally in yards allowed per game (288.8), while Notre Dame ranks eighth (295.3).

"Running game and defense travels; that's going to show up throughout a season," Penn State coach James Franklin said. "That's going to show up in bad weather. That's going to show up when you're trying to (run out the clock) at the end of the game."

In the Fiesta Bowl, Penn State outgained Boise State on the ground, 216 yards to 108. The Nittany Lions largely contained Broncos star Ashton Jeanty, the Heisman Trophy runner-up, limiting him to 104 yards on 30 carries. Penn State also forced four turnovers, including three inter-

'Being able to control the line of scrimmage, whether it's your offensive line or our defensive line, is critical," Franklin said. "It showed up (against Boise State). ... It's really kind of shown up all season."

Notre Dame was outgained on offense by Georgia, 296 yards to 244, but outrushed the Bulldogs 154 yards to 62. Meanwhile, Irish defenders forced and recovered two pivotal fumbles — one inside their own 20-yard line and one inside Georgia's — and stopped all three of Georgia's fourth-down at-

'The red zone defense, the big fourth down stops. It's a great ups with nine victories each and one group," Freeman said of his defense. "Got great leadership, great players, and they're doing a heck of a job."

Minority representation

The Orange Bowl matchup means either James Franklin or Marcus Freeman will have a chance to become the first Black coach to win a major college football championship.

That's something Freeman hopes will be less relevant at some point. But he recognizes it holds somewhat historic significance at the moment.

"It's a reminder that you are a representation for many others, and many of our players that look the same way I do," Freeman said.

"Your color shouldn't matter, and the evidence of your work should," Freeman continued. "So, it's a great honor. It's a privilege. But again, as the head coach of this place, I understand we're not in this position unless everybody in this program gets their job done.'

All tied up

Penn State and Notre Dame have played each other 19 times, starting in 1913, and have split those matchscoreless tie back in 1925. They haven't played since 2007, a 31-10 Penn State victory.

Older fans will remember when Penn State and Notre Dame took on the air of an annual rivalry from 1981 to 1992.

The 12-year stretch concluded with the classic "Snow Bowl" in South Bend, Indiana, won by Notre Dame, 17-16, on a late TD and 2-point conversion. They've played just twice since.

Welcome (back) to Miami

Notre Dame and Penn State each have played in the Orange Bowl five

The Irish's first appearance was on Jan. 1, 1973, when they lost 40-6 to Nebraska. They've since beaten Alabama (1975) and Colorado (1990) before losing to Colorado (1991) and Florida State (1995). Notre Dame also lost a BCS national title game to Alabama in Miami, 42-

Penn State first played in the Orange Bowl in 1969, beating Kansas. The Nittany Lions then beat Missouri (1970) and LSU (1974), lost to Oklahoma (1986) and beat Florida State (2006).
