Clark resigns as head of MLB players' union ahead of labor talks

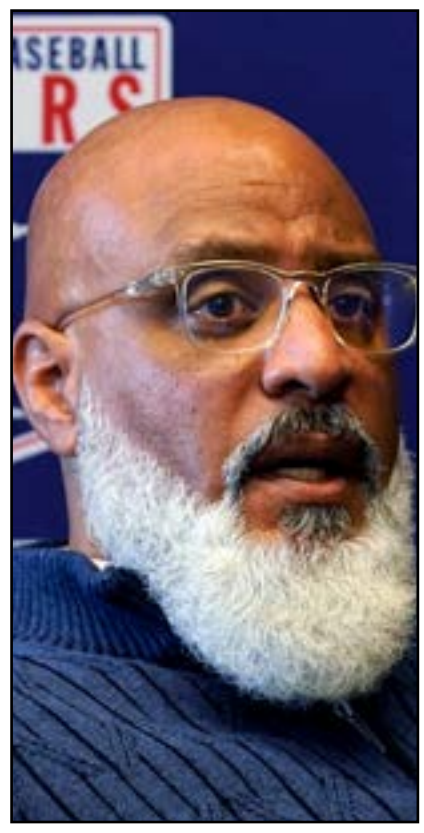

TAMPA, Fla. (AP) — Tony Clark resigned as head of the Major League Baseball Players Association, a person familiar with the union's deliberations said Tuesday.

The person spoke to The Associated Press on condition of anonymity because his decision had not yet been announced. The union planned to make the announcement later Tuesday.

Clark's decision took place during an investigation by the U.S. Attorney in Brooklyn, New York, into OneTeam Partners, a licensing company founded by the union, the NFL Players Association and RedBird Capital Partners in 2019.

"A lot of people have known that the investigation has been going on," said the New York Mets' Marcus Semien, a member of the union's eight-man executive subcommittee. "I think that this happening during the investigation is not like, as a subcommittee, is not like overly surprising, but it still hurts and it's still something I'm processing."

The union's executive board met Tuesday and did not make any decisions about a successor, the person said. The executive board planned to meet again Wednesday to consider its next steps.

TONY CLARK

Deputy executive director Bruce Meyer is set to be the primary negotiator in the upcoming labor talks, as he was in 2021-22. After Clark and Rick Shapiro led the 2016 negotiations, Meyer was hired in August 2018 as senior director of collective bargaining and legal and was promoted to his current role in July 2022.

Semien believes Clark is leaving to deal with the probe.

"I think so," he said, "because up to this point, before any investigations, I've had the ultimate confidence in Tony Clark to lead this player group. I've had the ultimate confidence in Bruce Meyer to be the lead negotiator for this player group."

The decision was made ahead of an expected start of collective bargaining in April for an agreement to replace the five-year labor contract that expires Dec. 1. Management appears on track to propose a salary cap, which possibly could lead to a work stoppage that causes regular-season games to be canceled for the first time since 1995.

Adam L. Braverman, a former U.S. associate deputy attorney general and U.S. attorney in Los Angeles, was hired by the union's executive subcommittee as outside counsel, two people familiar with the group's action told the AP. They spoke on condition of anonymity because the union hadn't announced that.

The union on Monday canceled Tuesday's scheduled start of the staff's annual tour of the 30 spring training camps, which was to have begun with the Cleveland Guardians in the morning and the Chicago White Sox in the afternoon.

Clark, 53, is a former All-Star first baseman who became the first player to head the union.

He played from 1995-2009, becoming a union leader shortly after going to his first executive board meeting in 1999.

Clark was hired as the union's director of player relations in 2010 and was promoted to deputy executive director in July 2013, when union head Michael Weiner's health declined because of a brain tumor. Weiner died that November and Clark was elevated to executive director, following Marvin Miller, Kenneth Moffett, Donald Fehr and Wiener as union head.

Clark led players through negotiations that led to an agreement in December 2016, about 3 1/2 hours before the prior deal was set to expire, and another in March 2022 after a 99-day lockout.

Meyer, 64, spent 30 years at Weil, Gotshal & Manges before joining the NHL Players Association in 2016 as senior director of collective bargaining, policy and legal.

Three members of the subcommittee, Jack Flaherty, Lucas Giolito and Ian Happ, were among the players who in March 2024 advocated for the ouster of Meyer in an effort led by former union lawyer Harry Marino. Clark backed Meyer, the effort failed and those three players were dropped off the subcommittee that December.

The subcommittee voted 8-0 against approving the 2022 labor contract and Meyer had advocated pushing management for a deal more favorable to the union. Team player representatives, the overall group supervising negotiations, voted 26-4 in favor, leaving the overall ballot at 26-12 for ratification.

In addition to Semien, the current subcommittee includes Chris Bassitt, Jake Cronenworth, Pete Fairbanks, Cedric Mullins, Paul Skenes, Tarik Skubal and Brent Suter.

OneTeam says since its formation that it added, among others, the players' associations of the WNBA, MLS, NWSL and the U.S. women's soccer national team. RedBird sold its stake in 2019 to HPS Investment Partners, Atlantic Park Strategic Capital Fund and Morgan Stanley Tactical Value.

Oilers

The long ball proved to be pivotal for the Oilers as they connected on 12 shots from beyond the arc while the Pickers made only five.

"I told the guys that if we make eight three-pointers we will be looking good, so for us to make 12 is fantastic," Chapin said. "I didn't like how many we shot, but I did like how many we made."

Stinson led the way with a game-high 24 points, Liederbach had 14 points, VanWormer and Heise each had 13 points while Fink added 10 points.

"Everybody made significant contributions tonight, especially the freshmen off the bench. I can't say enough about those guys," Chapin said. "Obviously, our senior leadership was great, too, as this is the most complete team I've been around as a player or a coach. From top to bottom, we have leaders everywhere, guys that are going to step up and shine when their number is called."

Friday night's quarterfinal game will be a rematch as the Oilers and Ramblers met at Franklin's Dick Russell Memorial tournament in late December. Cathedral Prep recorded a decisive 115-55 win, but Chapin feels his team has a chance if they stay true to the way they play the game.

"We can't count ourselves out. We are going to get out there and give them our best shot," Chapin said of playing Cathedral Prep again. "We tried playing their style and playing to their speed the first time, but all season we've tried to make teams play to our speed, so we'll try to play our style of basketball. We don't want to switch anything up, we want to stay true to who we are because that's what got us here. We have a chance to take over the No. 1 seed, so will give it our best shot."

RHP Buehler signs with rival with Padres

PEORIA, Ariz. (AP) — Walker Buehler has signed with the San Diego Padres after the right-hander spent the first eight seasons of his major league career with their archrivals, the Los Angeles Dodgers.

Buehler was in the Padres' clubhouse Tuesday morning after agreeing to a minor league deal with an invitation to big league camp.

"Yeah, it feels a little weird," Buehler told reporters in Arizona after pulling on a brown and gold uniform. "I imagine five years ago it would have felt a lot more weird, but this is a crazy game and this is a great opportunity for me."

Buehler earned two All-Star selections and two World Series rings during his 10 years in the Dodgers organization, serving as a mainstay in their rotation whenever healthy.
