Superintendent urges families to keep COVID out of schools

Students across Del Norte County returned to class Monday as the county continues to buck the trend of school shutdowns.

Superintendent Jeff Harris said as long as the district is allowed to remain open, it will do so. The key, he said, is students and their families doing everything they can to not bring COVID-19 into the classroom.

“To help prevent the transmission and quarantine of students and staff, we are encouraging families to consider requesting an independent study contract for up to two weeks following out-of-town visits or if they hosted out-of-town guests,”

Harris said. “This allows your children to continue to participate with their teacher and other classmates virtually but would also allow time for you to monitor for symptoms of COVID-19 or get tested for COVID prior to returning to school.”

Harris said the school board has made it clear offering in-person learning is a priority and only two things would force the district to close schools: an executive order or a breakout in a school that would not leave enough teachers to open.

Harris said the district is hoping to get teachers vaccinated soon to eliminate the second threat.

COVID cases inch upward

While California remains one of the hotbeds for COVID-19 in the nation, Del Norte County and much of Northern California are bucking the trend.

Cases continue to climb in Del Norte County, with 70 new cases reported in the last two weeks and six new cases reported Tuesday. But the vast majority are recovering with few problems, according to information released by Del Norte County Public Health.

There are currently 126 active cases in the county, with three people in the hospital. Since the pandemic began in March, two people with the virus have died in the county.

While the majority of California remains in place with stay-at-home orders, there is a little more freedom in Northern California. Last year, the state was broken into regions, with rules in place saying each region would be ordered to stay at home as soon as ICU capacity fell below 15 percent.

Every region in the state, with the exception of Northern California, has been under the stay-at-home order since then. But things remain relatively calm in Northern California with close to 35 percent ICU capacity still available.

Since the beginning of the pandemic, Del Norte County has reported 783 total cases with 19 hospitalizations. The majority of those cases, 59 percent, were in people ages 18 to 49 years.

The majority of the cases, 420, have been reported in the Crescent City area. In the southern half of the county, 278 cases have been reported, with fewer cases south and west. There were no new cases linked to Pelican Bay State Prison this week.

Dr. Warren Rehwaldt, the county’s public health director, announced in late December that vaccinations had begun. He said the first wave of vaccinations are geared toward front-line healthcare workers and employees and residents and senior assisted living facilities. According to California’s vaccination plans, Phase 1A residents, healthcare workers and those living in assisted living facilities, will be the first vaccinated. That work is ongoing.

When the state gets to Phase 1B, it will include anyone over age 75 and people employed in the education, childcare, emergency services and food and agriculture industries.

With an eye on moving forward after COVID-19, Del Norte County leaders say helping small businesses rebound will be a very important step. At the Del Norte Courthouse, below, leaders say there is a lot to do in the new year.

Officials in Del Norte County are looking to spend the new year moving beyond the challenges of 2020, according to County Administrative Officer Jay Sarina.

“We just came out of what I would consider one of our more negative years,” Sarina said Monday.

In 2021, Sarina said the county hopes to help county businesses and residents reopen and rebuild from the COVID-19 pandemic and prepare for what comes next.

The first priority, though? “Right now one of the biggest issues is obviously pandemic,” Sarina said. “The current level of restrictions is obviously affecting our small businesses.”

Unemployment rate jumps in November

By DAVID RUPKALVIS
The TriPLICATE

With government-mandated lockdowns kicking in during November, the employment rate in Del Norte County understandable fell.

During November, the employment fell 3.5 percent with 330 people losing their jobs, according to information released by the state.

The biggest drop in the month came in the farm industry, with 50 people losing jobs, a 15.6 percent decrease from October.

Federal government jobs dropped 6.3 percent in the month, but are still up 15.4 percent for the year.

With unemployment skyrocketing due to COVID-19, only two industries federal government and education and health services, showed employment increases in 2020.

Not surprising, leisure and hospitality, which includes restaurants and hotels, was down 3.9 percent in November and 20.4 percent year to year. Both industries have suffered due to government shutdowns

Farm jobs, trade, transportation and utilities and professional and business services also saw marked decreases in 2020.

In all, people looking for work or trying to work fell by close to 500 people in the last year while unemployment fell by close to 700 people.

Statewide, the unemployment rate at the end of November was 7.9 percent, while in Del Norte County it was slightly better at 7.6 percent.

Marin County led the state with a 4.2 percent unemployment rate, while Imperial County was suffering the worst, with a 16.4 percent unemployment rate.

Nationwide, the unemployment rate was 6.7 percent at the end of November, down from a high of 14.7 percent in April.

OBITUARIES

Melvin “Mel” Dale Hamner

June 9, 1937 – Dec. 11, 2020

Melvin “Mel” Dale Hamner, or Pops, as he was lovingly called by many, passed on December 11th, 2020, in Crescent City, CA after 83 great years. The family would like to thank the kind medical staff at Sutter Coast for caring for and comforting Pops in his final days.

Mel spent many of his days doing what he loved, hauling logs or taking care of his big rig. Up at four thirty AM for most of his life - the sound of his truck warming up is a memory that ALL of his kids and grandkids have. A fixture at the Frontier Room, or wherever the crew was meeting for breakfast, Mel was the friend you could always count on. He taught his children and grandchildren the value of hard work, generosity, and waking up early to seize every moment of daylight.

A seemingly gruff man with a heart of gold, Pops would always tell you what you needed to hear. Anyone that had the opportunity to see the twinkle in his blue eyes will tell you that when he loved you, he loved you with all of his heart.

Not perfect and never claiming to be, Pops always put his family first, worked hard, and worshipped his late wife Gail with everything he had. The family takes solace in knowing that Melvin and Gail are together again, where they were always happiest.

Mel is survived by many family members who will miss him dearly: his sister, Verla Borges; his children, Donna Jochimsen, Rogen Haskell, and Joseph Hamner; his nine grandchildren (who stole his tee shirts and his bed most nights) Jonathan Jochimsen, Justin Hamner, Stacey Jochimsen, Jonathan Ruth, Samantha Jochimsen, Katie (Jochimsen) Seaman, Joey Hamner, Brice Haskell, Chris Haskell, Cody Haskell, Kyle Jacques, and Zack Jacques. Pops is also survived by 14 great grandchildren.

Mel was preceded in death by his beloved wife, Gail (Wood) Hamner; his father, Dale Hamner; his mother, Lucille Kasalik Hamner; his son, Vern Hamner; his brothers Ed and George Prauss; his sister, Mildred (Millie) Prauss Sargent; and his son in law, Mark Jochimsen.

Pops, have fun driving your big rig in the sky - I'm sure we will all hear it waking us up every now and again. You are loved and will be missed by many.

Melvin was cremated shortly after death. The family is not holding an in-person service at this time.

Newsom unveils Safe Schools for All plan

Gov. Gavin Newsom recently released the State Safe Schools for All plan, California’s framework to support schools to continue operating safely in-person and to expand the number of schools safely resuming in-person instruction. Informed by growing evidence of the decreased risks and increased benefits of in-person instruction – especially for our youngest students – Newsom is advancing a strategy that will help create safe learning environments for students and safe workplaces for educators and other school staff. The plan was developed in partnership with the Legislature, and the governor will propose an early action package to ensure schools have the resources necessary to successfully implement key safety precautions and mitigation measures. Components of the plan will be launched in the coming weeks.

“As a father of four, I know firsthand what parents, educators and pediatricians continue to say: in-person is the best setting to meet not only the learning needs, but the mental health and social-emotional needs of our kids,” said Newsom. “In the midst of this pandemic, my administration is focused on getting students back into the classroom in a way that leads with student and teacher health. By focusing on a phased approach with virus mitigation and prevention at the center, we can begin to return our kids to school to support learning needs and restore the benefits of in-person instruction. It’s especially important for our youngest kids, those with disabilities, those with limited access to technology at home and those who have struggled more than most with distance learning.”

The administration’s strategy focuses on ensuring implementation and building confidence by bringing back the youngest children (TK-

“This framework is a positive step forward in ensuring that every child – regardless of where they may live or be enrolled in school – has the ability to receive quality instruction in California. Students learn and perform at their best in person, and parents across the state are anxious to ensure that their kids don’t fall further behind due to the pandemic. I share the Governor’s goal of returning to in-person instruction as quickly and as safely as possible, and look forward to continue working with the Administration on this important issue.”

Chair of the Senate Education Committee

2) and those who are most vulnerable first, then phasing in other grade levels through the spring. This phased-in return recognizes that younger children are at a lower risk of contracting and transmitting COVID-19. At the same time, distance learning will remain an option for parents and students who choose it and for those whose health status does not allow them to return to school in the near term.

California’s Safe Schools for All framework to safe reopening of in-person instruction is built on four pillars.

Funding to Support Safe Reopening: The budget will propose for immediate action in January, $2 billion to support safety measures – including testing, ventilation and PPE – for schools that have resumed in-person instruction or phasing in of in-person instruction by early spring.

Safety & Mitigation Measures for Classrooms: To further ensure health and safety in the classroom, the administration will support implementation of key health measures. This will include frequent testing for all students and staff, including weekly testing for communities with high rates of transmission; masks for all students and staff, including distribution of millions of surgical masks for school staff; improved coordination between school and health officials for contact tracing; and prioritization of school staff for vaccinations.

Hands-on Oversight & Assistance for Schools: Dr. Naomi Bardach, a UCSF pediatrician and expert on school safety, will lead the Safe Schools for All Team, a cross-agency team composed of dedicated staff from CDPH, Cal/OSHA, and educational agencies. The team will provide hands-on support to help schools develop and implement their COVID-19 Safety Plans. These supports include school visits and walk-throughs as needed, webinars and training materials and ongoing technical assistance.

Transparency & Accountability for Families and Staff: A state dashboard will enable all Californians to see their school’s reopening status, level of available funding and data on school outbreaks. Additionally, a web-based “hotline” will empower school staff and parents to report concerns to the Safe Schools for All Team, which will lead to escalating levels of intervention beginning with technical assistance and ending with legal enforcement.

“These four pillars will serve as tools to safely guide our state’s return to in-person instruction and protect the health of students, educators and all school staff,” said CHHS Secretary Dr. Mark Ghaly. “As a pediatrician and father, I know schools are the best place our kids can be and the positive impact in-person learning has on their overall health and well-being.”

“This framework is a positive step forward in ensuring that every child – regardless of where they may live or be enrolled in school – has the ability to receive quality instruction in California. Students learn and perform at their best in person, and parents across the state are anxious to ensure that their kids don’t fall further behind due to the pandemic. I share the Governor’s goal of returning to in-person instruction as quickly and as safely as possible, and look forward to continue working with the Administration on this important issue,” said Senator Connie M. Leyva, chair of the Senate Education Committee.

Newsom proposes billions for California businesses and jobs in 2021 budget

Gov. Gavin Newsom recently previewed his Equitable Recovery for California’s Businesses and Jobs plan, the business and workforce recovery elements of his 2021-22 state budget aimed to help California through the COVID-19.

The budget proposes an immediate action to approve $575 million for California’s small businesses, the backbone of the state’s economy, as they work to adapt their operations amid the COVID-19 pandemic. This proposal is on top of the initial $500 million allocated in partnership with the Legislature to the California Small Business COVID-19 Relief Grant.

“California’s economy is known the world over for our innovation, inclusion and resilience. That spirit will carry us through this pandemic and beyond,” said Newsom. “These budget proposals reflect our commitment to an equitable, broad-based recovery that ensures California remains the best place to start and grow a business – and where all Californians have an opportunity to reach their dreams. I look forward to continuing to partner with the Legislature to advance these priorities, so our economy can emerge stronger, fairer and more prosperous than before.”

Newsom previewed these budget proposals:

Small Business Grants

Prior to the pandemic, small businesses created two-thirds of new jobs and employed nearly half of all private-sector employees. California is home to 4.1 million small businesses that employ nearly half of the state’s total workforce. To help keep these businesses afloat, the governor is proposing a total of $1.075 billion for the state’s Small Business COVID-19 Relief Grant Program.

To put money into the hands of the most impacted small businesses as quickly as possible, the governor has proposed immediate legislative action on $575 million in additional grants. The investment will add to the initial $500 million allocation announced in November. The program offers grants up to $25,000 to micro and small businesses that have been impacted by the pandemic. These grants will be distributed across the state, with priority given to regions and industries impacted by the COVID-19 pandemic, disadvantaged communities and underserved small business groups.

The $575 million Early Action Budget proposal includes $25 million for small cultural institutions, such as museums and art galleries.

California Jobs Initiative

The budget also proposes sustained investments to preserve California’s competitiveness. The California Jobs Initiative, a $777.5 million proposal, focuses on job creation and retention, regional development, small businesses and climate innovation, including increased funding for:

- California Competes Tax Credit, which incentivizes businesses to locate in California to stay, grow and create quality full-time jobs in the state and creates a new CalCompetes grant program to support job creation and investments in infrastructure ($430 million)

- Extended Main Street Small Business Tax Credit to encourage hiring new employees and rehiring former employees ($100 million).
- Mitigating the SALT deduction limitation for S-corporation shareholders
- The California Dream Fund to seed entrepreneurship and small business creation in underserved communities ($35 million)
- Additional funds for the California Infrastructure and Economic Development Bank’s Small Business Finance Center to provide small business loan and disaster loan guarantees ($50 million which will be leveraged to provide $250 million in loans) and for the California Rebuilding Fund ($50 million.)

- Expanded sales tax exclusions through the treasurer’s office to reduce the cost of manufacturing equipment in order to promote innovation and meet the state’s climate goals ($100 million)

The funding also includes $12.5 million allocated, in partnership with the Legislature, in late 2020 to fully capitalize the California Rebuilding Fund to support $125 million low-interest loans to underserved businesses.

Workforce Development

The budget proposes one-time and ongoing investments totaling $353 million to support California’s workers as they adapt to changes in the economy brought about by COVID-19. The investments lift up proven workforce development strategies like apprenticeship and High-Road Training Partnerships and encourage greater collaboration and coordination among California’s institutions of higher learning and local workforce partners. Demand-driven workforce programs can help California train the workforce of the future in key sectors including health care and technology.

Fee Waivers

The Budget proposes $70.6 million for fee waivers to individuals and businesses most impacted by the pandemic – including barbers, cosmetologists, manicurists, bars and restaurants. The waivers will assist those who have not been able to operate or are operating at reduced capacity during the pandemic.

Housing

Through the Infill Infrastructure Grant Program, the budget proposes $500 million to create jobs and long-term housing development to unlock more than 7,500 new permanently affordable homes for Californians. IIG grants to local governments and developers bring the cost down for new housing by defraying costs for things like sewers, roads and site preparation, all while putting thousands of people to work in good jobs building this housing-related infrastructure.

Like it or not, we learned a few things in 2020

By ‘ASTA BOWEN

I have to admit, I almost feel sorry for old 2020. It's been catching a lot of hate these days, and not without cause. Of course, the year we call 2020 - with the obligatory eye-roll - isn't an actual force unto itself, just a measure of time, one of the handy concepts we use to create a sense of order in the universe.

And there's the rub. What this year took from us, along with far too many loved ones, is order itself, our sense of control over how life should go, our "normal." 2020 put the lie to the notion that we are in charge.

Plans went out the window without a glimmer of warning.

Not just specific plans, like someone's birthday party or paying the rent, but the very ability to plan — to predict, to calculate, to organize.

The future went blank as the biggest jolts came seemingly out of the blue:

the coronavirus itself, the rise of one movement for social justice and another against established authority. Even immutable objects like the U.S. elections were battered by controversy and defied predictions, all as the stock market plummeted, then roared to historic highs. The mail did go through, but for a time even that was thrown in doubt.

With vaccinations barely under way, it's still too early for much planning, but there are powerful choices we can make right now, especially in

- how we view what's happened and what we intend to do about it. Like it or not, we learned a few things:
- We discovered that kids actually want to go to school - just not necessarily for the teaching and learning part.
  - We must never forget the compassion, courage and sacrifice of our doctors, nurses and unsung helpers.
  - For those who thought leadership doesn't matter that much in a land of the free and home of the brave, guess what: Leadership matters. Everywhere.
  - Some kinds of work can be done better without all the commuting and water cooler time.
  - As donations poured into food banks and other charities, many of us learned that where government wouldn't or couldn't help, we could still make a difference.
  - Some of us found we could get by with considerably less toilet paper than we thought.
  - We don't actually need

- showy conventions and predictable speeches to nominate a candidate for public office.
- We can name racism, face it and do something about it. Justice is a work in progress.
  - Screen life, especially social media, can't substitute for real life. But what we read and say online can have real consequences.
  - Flu seasons of the future might get a lot less deadly if we hang onto these masks and remember what we've learned about viral transmission.
  - Elections matter. They can be free and fair and without a lot of hype, thanks to legions of principled poll workers. Having different ways to vote will make an election harder, not easier, to steal.
  - Not everyone made it through lockdown on quarantines, streaming and sourdough bread. A lot of people made it by a hair's breadth, in debt or despair, putting

- their lives on the line for everyone else. Others didn't make it at all.
- The power of human touch and the joy of being together should never be taken for granted. Never.
- As for that "normal" we're in such an all-fired rush to get back to? Not so fast, pardner. There's some normal we should have shed a long time ago, and this pandemic we can't wait to leave behind is giving us a chance to see the world anew and make real changes in it.
- As 2021 begins, it's as if we're pausing atop a great historic pivot, the likes of which we may never see again. We may not control the outcome, but we can step up and own our part in it.

No matter who won the 2020 elections, we all win when we choose hope over hate; when culture and community flourish with or without Twitter and TikTok; when George Floyd's grandkids go about their lives without fear; when we help each other find jobs, food, shelter, promise and meaning in life. When we help each other, period.

Del Norte High School senior selected for national ensemble

Andre Pamplona Da Silva is officially one of the best. Da Silva, a senior at Del Norte High School, was recently named to the National Association for Music Education 2020 All-National Honor Ensembles. In doing so, Da Silva will take part in the first virtual event, creating music from locations across the nation.

Da Silva will join others who made the National Honor Ensembles in several rehearsals with the 2020 ANHE conductors and workshops with renowned clinicians. Each ensemble will create a final, recorded performance that will be premiered online during the National Association for Music Education's Music In Our Schools Month in March.

"Andre has worked incredibly hard over the past four years at Del Norte High School and beyond," said Dan Sedgwick, music teacher at Del Norte High School. "He has participated in Northern California Band and Choir Director's Association honor choir, California Choral Director's Association's Regional and State honor choir, California Orchestra Directors Association Honor Ensembles, and, just recently, found out that he was accepted into the California Alliance for Jazz All-State Jazz Choir. There are only 15 members of this elite California ensemble.

"All-National Honor Ensembles is as high as you can get. He is the first Del Norte High Student to ever make it into the national ensembles. Current limitations to live music has not stifled his drive to push himself. He is currently waiting for college audition results as he is about to begin his next part of his musical journey! He has already been accepted into the Berklee College of Music in Boston, Massachusetts. In music classes at DNHS, he is a leader and does pretty much everything he can to help, teach and foster other students in their musical journey."

The All-National Honor Ensembles performers represent collaboration and creativity in its highest musical form. The All-National Honor Ensembles consist of a concert band, symphony orchestra, mixed choir, jazz ensemble, guitar ensemble, and modern band. Students were chosen through an audition process. The concert band and symphony orchestra will each have 120 instrumentalists each, the jazz ensemble 13 instrumentalists, the mixed choir 241 vocalists, the guitar ensemble 45 instrumentalists and the modern band 13 performers.

Selected students will be rehearsing a challenging repertoire in preparation for performing under the direction of six of the most prominent conductors in the United States. All conductors have received top honors in their field and will spend several days rehearsing with students before the concert.

Dungeness crab fishing industry adapts to climate shock

An unprecedented marine heat wave that led to a massive harmful algal bloom and a lengthy closure of the West Coast Dungeness crab fishery significantly altered the use of ocean resources across seven California crab-fishing communities.

The delayed opening of the 2015-16 crab-fishing season followed the 2014-16 North Pacific marine heat wave and subsequent algal bloom.

The bloom produced high levels of the biotoxin domoic acid, which can accumulate in crabs and render them hazardous for human consumption.

That event, which is considered a "climate shock" because of its severity and impact, tested the resilience of California's fishing communities, researchers from Oregon State University, the University of Washington and National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration's Northwest Fisheries Science Center found.

The study is the first to examine impacts from such delays across fisheries, providing insight into the response by the affected fishing communities, said James Watson, one of the study's co-authors and an assistant professor in OSU's College of Earth, Ocean, and Atmospheric Sciences.

When the Dungeness season was delayed, roughly two-thirds of all vessels stopped fishing temporarily while others switched to different fisheries or moved to more favorable locations.

Understanding these impacts and adaptations is critical because the fishing industry is expected to be tested further in the future as the climate warms and climate shock events increase in frequency and intensity, said James Watson, who specializes in marine social-ecological systems and understanding complex adaptive systems.

"This work is really about understanding how fishing communities can adapt to climate change," he said. "We found that West Coast fisheries are highly adaptive. Generally, they can take a hit and bounce back, though some communities are more resilient than others."

The findings were published this week by the Proceedings of the National Academy of Sciences.

The study's lead author is Mary C. Fisher, who did the work as a research scientist at the Northwest Fisheries Science Center and is now a doctoral student at the University of Washington. Fisher was supported by a National Science Foundation Graduate Research Internship fellowship.

Additional co-authors are Stephanie Moore and Jamael Samhoury of NOAA's Northwest Fisheries Science Center and Sunny Jardine of the University of Washington.

The Dungeness crab fishery is vital to many West Coast communities; it accounts for about 26 percent of all fishery revenue in California and supports more than a quarter of all commercial fishing vessels.

To better understand the industry's resilience and adaptability to adversity, the researchers studied the impacts of the marine heat wave and harmful algal bloom on more than 2,500 fishing vessels across seven fishing communities along the California coast, from Crescent City in the north to Morro Bay.

"We wanted to examine the extent to which the Dungeness crab fishery delays affected participation in other fisheries and the duration of those changes,"

Courtesy photo

A heat wave that led to a large algal bloom significantly altered the use of ocean resources along the California coast. The Dungeness crab fishing industry is working to adapt to the changing ocean.

Fisher said.

The researchers found that 71 percent of the California Dungeness crab fishing vessels stopped fishing all together during the season delay.

The remainder either moved to locations unaffected by the delay or switched to other types of fishing. Larger vessels fared better during the closures because they were able to more easily travel to new locations.

Fisheries in Central California were more resilient to the closure in part because they had shorter delays and were generally less dependent on Dungeness crab.

The fishermen in those communities were typically more flexible in how they fished prior to the 2015-16 season, giving them more options during the closure period.

Vessels in northern California are potentially more prone to falling into a "gilded trap" for Dungeness crab, meaning their deep commitment to Dungeness crab fishing may make it harder for them to adapt if needed to other types of fishing, Watson said.

The delayed opening of the 2015-16 commercial Dungeness season had a significant economic impact on Dungeness crab fishermen and their communities, with the average catch at about 52 percent of the average over the previous five years.

The researchers did not observe any significant, lasting changes to the Dungeness crab fishing community after the closures were lifted, suggesting that fishing community may mostly return to "normal" fishing practices relatively quickly after a short-term disturbance such as a climate shock.

The most resilient fishermen in the industry leverage strong networks of contacts in different fisheries and have the skills and equipment to fish for different species, Watson said.

"What we don't know is if there is a tipping point, at which fishing communities can no longer adapt or bounce back," Watson said. "If they get hit again and again, at what point do they permanently change or leave the industry?"

Del Norte High School has been closed to most in-person learning during the current school year. However, the school is working on a plan that would open the campus to students at least part-time later this month.

educational staff,” he said. “The state has committed to putting educators at the top of the list for vaccines, and we will continue to work with public health and out staff to get vaccines out to our staff as soon as possible.” Harris said the governor recently announced a new plan for schools, called the Safe Schools for All plan. The plan includes four major components: funding, discussion of safety and mitigation, oversight and assistance and transparency and accountability. The goal is to return students across the state to class. “Del Norte is already engaged in in-person learning, so we will be closely following the details of the proposal over the next few weeks to see how it may impact us,” Harris said. Harris said another bill in the Legislature is also being discussed. “You may also hear about an emergency bill in the California Legislature – AB10,” Harris said. “The bill would require schools to move to in-person learning as soon as they are able to do so. Again, since our district is already doing in-person learning, this bill will have little impact on us.” Harris did explain that Del Norte is not under a mandatory stay-at-home order like much of the state. California split the state into five regions and the stay-at-home order kicks in when the ICU capacity at hospitals in the region fall below 15 percent. The Northern California region had 35 percent capacity this week.

Harris urged students and families to continue to take precautions such as wearing masks, washing hands and, most importantly, staying home if they are sick. Harris also announced a new resource for Del Norte County families. He said connectdelnorte.org is a website the district helped put together that can help connect local families with needed resources. Whether it’s a job search, food assistance, medical care of school related, the website will have information to help local families.

Yurok Tribe purchases 40-acre parcel for farm

The Yurok Tribe recently purchased 40-acres of agricultural land to create a food security farm. “The COVID-19 crisis illuminated a very real potential for food shortages in our rural region. We purchased this property to make the tribe more self-sufficient during times of emergency and when things get back to normal. This property presents an ideal location to cultivate a tremendous amount of healthy, organic produce for our people,” said Joseph L. James, the chairman of the Yurok Tribe. “Establishing this environmentally sustainable food security farm will also strengthen our sovereignty.”

“This year, we have taken significant steps toward increasing the availability of healthy foods on the reservation. With this acquisition and the purchase of the old Weitchpec nursery, we have secured more than 65 acres of land for food production, which will complement our efforts to restore our natural food resources. For many years to come, these projects will improve the physical and mental health of our youth, families and elders,” added Ryan Ray, the Yurok Tribal Council’s Requa District representative. The Yurok Tribe Environmental Program’s Food Sovereignty Division will manage the Klamath farm, which is located next to the Margaret Keating Elementary School and the Yurok Tribe’s Head Start and Early Head Start. The Food Sovereignty Division’s staff will employ a holistic, regenerative method of cultivation to grow a wide variety of vegetables at the site. An organic orchard will be established on the property, too. Purchased with funds from the Coronavirus Aid, Relief and Economic Security Act, the parcel is comprised of roughly equal parts fertile pasture and forest. The redwood-dominant forest flanks Mynot Creek and contains traditional food resources, such as huckleberry. In the future, the Klamath farm will also serve as an outdoor classroom where Yurok students will participate in projects featuring the following: earth-friendly plant cultivation, culturally consistent land management, traditional food harvesting and fish and wildlife habitat restoration. Earlier this year, the Yurok Agricultural Corporation, a Yurok Tribe-owned entity, acquired the 26-acre Weitchpec Nursery. In addition to sustainably grown fruits and vegetables, the tribally operated nursery will soon offer plant seeds and starts as well as gardening equipment. The Yurok Agricultural Corporation will also provide tutorials at the site to assist local residents in developing and maintaining their own food gardens. In 2017, the USDA declared the Yurok Reservation a food desert because there are very few sources of healthy sustenance on tribal lands. This was not always the case. Prior to European contact, the Klamath River was filled with fish, including abundant salmon and steelhead runs that arrived in each of the four seasons. On land, a large quantity of wild game accompanied an enormous variety of edible plants and fungi. The immense natural bounty was a direct outcome of precise tribal land stewardship strategies designed over the course of millennia to facilitate maximum productivity and biological diversity. Another factor contributing to the lack of access to nutritious foods is the fact that most of the arable land on the reservation is privately owned, excluding the tribe’s new properties in Klamath and Weitchpec. At the start of the pandemic, it quickly became clear that rural areas would receive resources last, which is a worrisome predicament in the event of a food shortage. That is why the tribe is developing creative solutions to increase the availability of healthy forms of nourishment on the reservation, such as purchasing land for organic crop production, the restoration of traditional food sources and the revitalization of the overall landscape. “We are working toward becoming completely self-sufficient and food sovereign. I foresee a day when there is convenient access to sufficient supplies of organically grown produce and the natural resources that sustained our people since time immemorial,” concluded Chairman James.

The Yurok Tribe is taking step to ensure it can care for its own in an emergency. Purchasing land to use for a farm is another step in that direction.

County

Before much else can happen, Sarina said the community needs to get the virus under control so it can reduce restrictions on businesses and return to “some sense of normalcy.” He’s seen the county’s ability to respond to the virus change over time. At the beginning, officials were reacting to a lot of unknowns, he said. “Now, we’re looking at getting through the vaccine rollout,” Sarina said. Turning the corner with vaccinations and reducing the county’s COVID-19 case count will allow businesses to reopen fully and safely statewide. Over 450,000 had received the first dose of a vaccine by Monday. “For us locally, that’s huge,” he said.

The pandemic has provided county officials a learning opportunity. Sarina said the health crisis has highlighted how much the county relies on volunteers for its Office of Emergency Services and public health department. There’s a higher rate of turnover with volunteers than with paid staff, Sarina said. That means volunteers require more regular training to be prepared. “Because we rely on volunteers and other agencies, it’s become apparent that we have to get deeper and deeper with trained bodies,” Sarina said.

That’s all going to translate into one of the county’s major efforts in the new year: A tsunami preparedness initiative and a full-scale evacuation drill in the fall. March 2021 will mark the 10-year anniversary of the last tsunami to hit Del Norte County, after a 9.0 earthquake near Japan sent waves to the western U.S. and killed one in Crescent City. The last full-scale evacuation drill was about a decade ago, too, Sarina said, since an effort like that takes a “tremendous amount of planning.”

So, the collaborative spirit between individuals and public agencies highlighted by the pandemic will be needed for the initiative, from education efforts like Tsunami Preparedness Week and the Great ShakeOut to the evacuation drill. “It’s everybody, getting everybody involved,” Sarina said. “It’s significant because obviously Crescent City has been effected or will be effected in the future.” Beyond emergency preparedness, county officials anticipate infrastructure improvements in the new year, too. The county plans to apply for state grants for park projects through Proposition 68 funding and will continue upgrades to the recreation gymnasium and Pyke Field, Sarina said. Other infrastructure projects will be on the agenda as county officials will also begin planning to use the funds from the 1% sales tax imposed on unincorporated areas of the county by Measure R, approved in November’s general election. Those new funds — about $1.2 million a year, county officials estimated prior to the election — will be designated for county programs, like law enforcement, emergency dispatch, street repairs and other county services. The spending of the funds will be overseen by a seven-member committee, to include five area residents appointed by the Board of Supervisors. Still, the new funding coupled with state and federal funding sources won’t cover all of what the county hopes to do, Sarina said. “The cost of doing business keeps going up, and revenue does not always keep pace,” Sarina said. Still, he’s optimistic the lessons learned in 2020 can be translated into recovery in 2021. “I see us going in a positive direction from a city and a county standpoint.”

Steady winter rain increases threat of landslides

JEREMY C. RUARK
Country Media

Over the last week, landslides have been reported in several locations across Oregon and Northern California.

Highway 30 just east of Astoria reopened to one lane Jan. 5 following a rock and mud slide that closed the busy route early Monday morning, Jan. 4.

"The cause is excessive rainfall the past few days and saturated soils," Oregon Department of Transportation spokesman Lou Torres said. "We have many places on state highways along the coast, in the coast range and in the Cascades where we can get landslides, mudslides, rockfalls, etc. After all this is Oregon where we get lots of rainfall that falls on steep slopes."

Torres said motorists need to pay attention when driving along Highway 30 and other routes in landslide areas.

"The message is that this is winter in Oregon," he said. "Keep both hands on the steering wheel, mind on driving and eliminate distractions. Be prepared for winter driving conditions which can mean dealing with wet and icy roads, snow, high water and possibly rock and mud slides."

Torres added that road closures during the winter are a fact of life in the region and can't be totally prevented.

"Always leave plenty of travel time, check TripCheck.com before you go and expect delays," Torres said.

The Oregon Department of Geology and Mineral Industries said the landslides can be caused by several factors, including the type of geology, the slope and water. Rainwater buildup following frequent storms can lead to a landslide.

According to a DOGAMI executive summary report about landslides and debris flows, the events are common due to the combination of high precipitation, steep slopes and landslide-prone geologic units.

DOGAMI lists the following for precautions.

People, structures and roads located below steep slopes in canyons and near the mouths of canyons may be at serious risk. Dangerous places can include:

- Canyon bottoms, stream channels, and areas of rock and soil accumulation at the outlets of canyons.

- Bases of steep hillsides.
- Road cuts or other areas where slopes of hills have been excavated or over-steepened.

- Places where slides or debris flows have occurred in the past.

According to DOGAMI's A Homeowners Guide to Landslides, a landslide is the downward slope movement of rock, soil or debris. Debris flow, earth flow, rock fall, mudflow, mudslide, and slump are also terms for landslide.

Landslides can take human life. However, even a few inches of slope movement can disrupt septic, sewer and water lines and crack foundations severely damaging or destroying your home, according to the guide.

If you live on or near a steep slope, the guide encourages you to look for warning signs of landslides by evaluating your property for signs of landslide movement. Many, but not all, signs of landslide activity are listed below. A high score may indicate the presence of a landslide.

Inside Your Home:

- Cracks in walls
- Nails popping out of walls
- Bulging walls
- Separation of chimney from walls
- Creaking/popping noises
- Light switches coming out of walls
- Doors/windows hard to shut
- Twisted beams
- Cracks in floors
- Water seeping into basement

Outside Your Home:

- Changes in surface drainage
- Bulges in retaining walls or tilting of walls
- Cracks developing in the soil
- Pistol-butted or bent trees
- Broken water, utility, or sewer lines
- Cracks in sidewalks or foundation
- Stretched or leaning utility lines

The guide also recommends actions property owners can take to reduce the chances of landslides, which include:

Courtesy photo
Debris from the hillside slid down and covered a portion of Highway 30 east of Astoria.

- Draining water from surface runoff, downspouts, and driveways well away from slopes.
- Planting native ground

- cover on slopes.
- Consulting with a professional before significantly altering existing slopes uphill or downslope of your home.

Art Notes: Art from the Inside exhibition kicks off Jan. 14

DNACA's 6th annual "Art From the Inside" Exhibition

Del Norte Association for Cultural Awareness presents its 6th annual "Art From the Inside" Exhibition, at the Del Norte Courthouse from January 14 - March 3. The exhibit will feature artworks created in teaching artist Julie McNiel's Visual Arts workshops at Pelican Bay State Prison. This program provides arts workshops at all 33 state prisons as a way to reduce recidivism rates and prevent violence within prisons.
