The responses relating to the number of roommates were analyzed to identify correlations between the year of the students' program and accommodation density. As shown in Figures 12a and 12b, first-year students tend to live alone (30.9%) or with one roommate (31.3%). Half of the students in their sixth year or higher tend live with one roommate. Approximately half of the second and third-year students share accommodations with 3 or more other people.
