Senior Community Connections is a free service that helps seniors and their families find the right senior living community for the future.

"When families set out on the journey to find a community, it's an extremely overwhelming process," said Shona McIntyre, senior care advisor. "I want them to know that they don't have to go this alone. There are local people here that can help them find a community and save time and money."

Both a social worker and dementia practitioner who has worked in a senior community for more than 15 years, Shona guides families through the process. She asks about the senior's overall care needs, their budget and the area the senior wants to live in. She then finds two or three communities that meet those needs and only recommends those communities she would refer to her own loved ones.

"I know what to look for. I know what questions to ask," she said. "I help them get it right the first time and can save them time and thousands of dollars."
