Accessibility for seniors aging in place

One of the many solutions Next Day Access provides.

Owner of Next Day Access St. Louis Brian Liberman prides his company on its quick installations of accessibility products in client's homes and businesses.

"We try to perform all of our home evaluations the same day the calls come in, and we can install on literally the same day if it's an urgent situation," Brian said.

Brian's own mother was a quadriplegic, and he's seen firsthand the need to improve safety and accessibility in the home. That's why he founded the St. Louis franchise of Next Day Access.

"When I saw the opportunity to start this business, it hit home," Brain said "So I made the move to start a new territory here in St. Louis and started with one employee and now I've got three."

Brian believes aging in place leads to better outcomes for his clients.

"It can be vastly less expensive to age in your home," Brian said.

Next Day Access's most common installations include wheelchair ramps and lifts, grab bars and bathtub modifications, and also feature a wide range of accessibility products. If space is an issue, Next Day also offers the FlexStep, a furniture-grade set of stairs that converts into a platform to lift wheelchair users.

"It's pretty cool. It's a great space saver in a garage or somewhere else where a ramp would not be feasible," Brian said.

Whether you're looking to restore the independence of a loved one or simply have safety top of mind, Next Day Access has the solution for any mobility need.
