"Summer is the perfect time to assess where your student is in terms of readiness for the upcoming school year," explained David Huguelet, director of the Chesterfield-Ellisville location. "At Huntington, we basically do three things: exam prep, subject tutoring and academic skills training. Every student starts with an academic evaluation to identify specific strengths and weaknesses. Then, a personalized learning plan is developed. The younger the student, the more tests they have because with a first-, second-, or third-grader, we're testing every letter, every number, every two-letter combination, silent E words – everything all the way up through reading comprehension and standardized testing skills."

David noted that kindergarten through eighth-grade students are more likely to need academic skills training.

"Although we have had some older students recently, because their high school GPA is not what they want it to be. The good news is that we have excellent schools in West County. The bad news is that academically unprepared students are going to struggle," David said.

A few hours each week for the remainder of the summer can make all the difference.

"We're always looking ahead," David said. "When I see a seventh-grader reaching for a calculator to multiply eight times seven, I'm thinking, 'We're going to have timing issues on the math section of the ACT if we don't get this straightened out.' Students who take the time and put in the effort to stabilize shaky foundations early on are much more prepared for the following year and the year after that."
