

Making interior design dreams come true

*Rae Sutton, interior designer
& general manager*

Step into Three French Hens' 10,000-square-foot showroom and find yourself in a world of wonder.

"We have 10 different rooms, each decorated in a unique style of furniture and decor. On top of that we have thousands of upholstery and leather samples and dozens of furniture vendors in the U.S., which gives us the ability to help our customers create exactly the look and feel they're searching for," explained Rae Sutton, general manager and interior designer. "Customers can come into our store with a concept and we can help them achieve whatever they are dreaming of."

Rae pointed out that, at its core, Three French Hens is a furniture store but interior design includes all of the furnishings.

"We layer every room with wonderful things, including amazing artwork. All of the oil paintings in the store are one-of-a-kind, and every time I go to market (where she chooses furniture and furnishings), I have at least three or four customers that I'm searching for – to find specific pieces."

The store's team of interior designers, affectionately known as "hens," have years of experience working with customers and contractors. Customers can book a consultation online or drop in, be inspired and set-up an appointment in-store. Just don't forget to bring photos, measurements and any other materials that will help the hens help you!

"Now is the perfect time to start planning a refresh or remodel," Rae predicted. "I think the design trends of 2025 are heading towards 'custom and cozy.' We're excited to help customers explore exactly what that means to them."
