the 1990s, the number of people in the UK who are aged 65 and over has increased by 1.5 million (1990–1999) and is projected to increase by a further 1.5 million by 2010 (Office for National Statistics, 2000). The number of people aged 65 and over is projected to increase by 2.5 million by 2020 (Office for National Statistics, 2000).

There is a growing awareness of the need to develop strategies to meet the needs of the ageing population. The Department of Health (1999) has published a strategy for the ageing population, which sets out the government's commitment to improve the health and well-being of older people.

The strategy is based on the following principles: (1) to improve the health and well-being of older people; (2) to ensure that older people are able to live independently; (3) to ensure that older people are able to participate in society; (4) to ensure that older people are able to live in their own homes; (5) to ensure that older people are able to live in their own communities.

the 1990s, the number of people in the UK who are employed in the public sector has increased by 1.5 million (from 2.5 million in 1980 to 4 million in 1999). The public sector has also become an important employer of people with disabilities, with 1.5 million people with disabilities employed in the public sector in 1999 (1.1 million in 1980).

There are a number of reasons why the public sector has become an important employer of people with disabilities. One reason is that the public sector has a long history of employing people with disabilities. In the 19th century, the public sector employed people with disabilities in a number of different roles, including as clerks, typists, and stenographers.

Another reason why the public sector has become an important employer of people with disabilities is that the public sector has a number of different departments and agencies, each of which has its own specific needs. This means that the public sector can employ people with disabilities in a wide range of roles, including as clerks, typists, stenographers, and in a number of other roles.

A third reason why the public sector has become an important employer of people with disabilities is that the public sector has a number of different policies and procedures in place to support people with disabilities. These policies and procedures are designed to ensure that people with disabilities are able to work in the public sector on an equal basis with people without disabilities.

There are a number of challenges facing the public sector in its efforts to employ people with disabilities. One challenge is that the public sector has a number of different departments and agencies, each of which has its own specific needs. This means that the public sector can employ people with disabilities in a wide range of roles, including as clerks, typists, stenographers, and in a number of other roles.

A second challenge facing the public sector is that the public sector has a number of different policies and procedures in place to support people with disabilities. These policies and procedures are designed to ensure that people with disabilities are able to work in the public sector on an equal basis with people without disabilities.

A third challenge facing the public sector is that the public sector has a number of different policies and procedures in place to support people with disabilities. These policies and procedures are designed to ensure that people with disabilities are able to work in the public sector on an equal basis with people without disabilities.

A fourth challenge facing the public sector is that the public sector has a number of different policies and procedures in place to support people with disabilities. These policies and procedures are designed to ensure that people with disabilities are able to work in the public sector on an equal basis with people without disabilities.

A fifth challenge facing the public sector is that the public sector has a number of different policies and procedures in place to support people with disabilities. These policies and procedures are designed to ensure that people with disabilities are able to work in the public sector on an equal basis with people without disabilities.

A sixth challenge facing the public sector is that the public sector has a number of different policies and procedures in place to support people with disabilities. These policies and procedures are designed to ensure that people with disabilities are able to work in the public sector on an equal basis with people without disabilities.

A seventh challenge facing the public sector is that the public sector has a number of different policies and procedures in place to support people with disabilities. These policies and procedures are designed to ensure that people with disabilities are able to work in the public sector on an equal basis with people without disabilities.

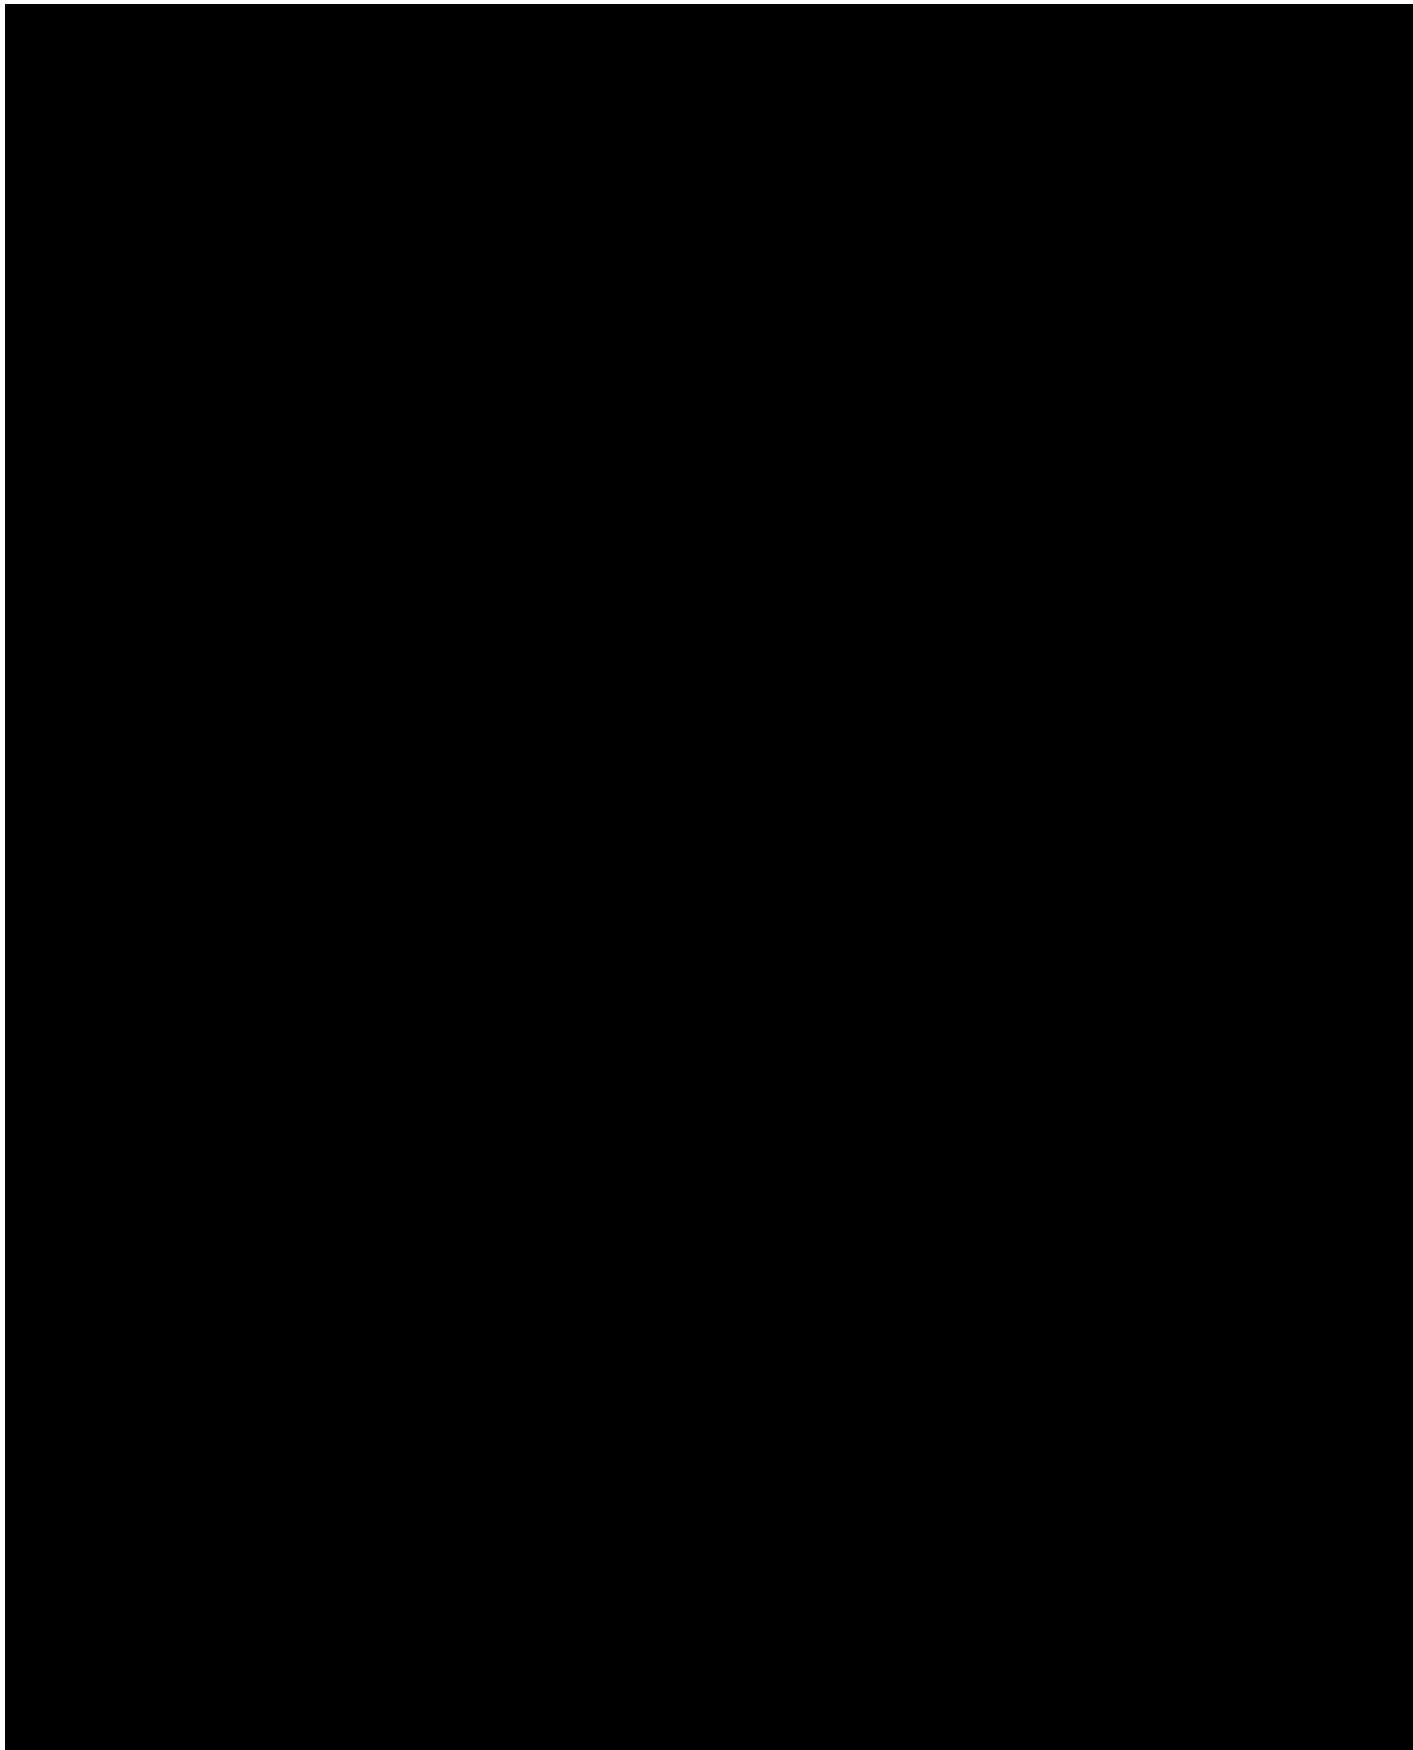

An eighth challenge facing the public sector is that the public sector has a number of different policies and procedures in place to support people with disabilities. These policies and procedures are designed to ensure that people with disabilities are able to work in the public sector on an equal basis with people without disabilities.

District administration was made aware of an allegation involving a teacher at Graves County Middle School. School officials immediately reported this information to the Graves County Sheriff's Department for investigation.

We have since been informed that, as a result of that investigation, charges have been filed against this teacher.

Because this is an ongoing legal and personnel matter, we are limited in the information we can publicly share. However, we want to assure our families that the safety and well-being of our students is our highest priority. We take any allegation involving the safety of a child or the professional conduct of an employee extremely seriously and will continue to cooperate fully with law enforcement and the appropriate authorities.

Our commitment remains to providing every student with a safe, supportive, and effective learning environment.

We are grateful to the Graves County Sheriff's Department for their professionalism and assistance throughout this matter, and we appreciate the continued trust and support of our students, families, and community.

Thank you,

Matthew Madding
Superintendent
Graves County Schools
